Are your loops horizontal? Are yours fed through a bulun? I have never put one up, but they do look good on a modeling program.

Yes, and yes.

Loops have a neat "side effect".. atmospheric noise is quieter than on a dipole cut for the same frequency, in the same space, while signals are at least as good, if not better. I don't have high-end test equipment to "prove" it, but my ears tell me that these are the results.

I've also heard reports from friends who live in BPL test areas who say that full wave loops tend to reject BPL interference better than dipoles and vertical monopoles. It doesn't get rid of the interference, but there seems to be less of it, according to them. I haven't tried it myself, as I don't live in a BPL area, but it's worth a thought or two.

I've also run vertical deltas and rectangular loops, and found similar results on the atmospheric "static", as well as good gain, etc. The vertical loops were tried on 10 and 11 meters.

That won't stop the people from cussing and keying down to jamb channels, fools are fools regardless of the equipment, that's the same as saying there would be no murders if we outlaw guns. Sometimes 4 watts is not enough. When I go mudding in my truck, sometimes I'm in places with no cell service and kicking on the amp saves me from walking 10 miles if I break down or get stuck. I also like to shoot skip on sideband and the best place for that is the freebands. You can run illegally and still be responsible about it. I do everything I can to make sure I am not coming over phone lines and bleeding on several channels. I don't use junk export radios, I use low pass filters and I check my equipment with a scope. I don't run power unless I really need to. BTW, Copper no longer sells amps.

Yes, assholes will be assholes regardless of the equipment that's available. The problems started just after the Citizen's Band was created, and they aren't going away anytime soon. But that's no excuse to add to the problems with more amps.

> Sometimes 4 watts is not enough. When >I go mudding in my truck, sometimes I'm in places with no cell service and Get a 3-watt cellphone. I have a Uniden SMS-316TSD in my truck and it works great. Coverage is almost 100% (that is unless you are going deep into the Bitterroots, in which case it pays to get a satellite phone). And 4 watts on Ch. 9 will reach 10 miles without a problem if you have a decent antenna because there is very little noise on the channel. So I don't see your reasons as justification for an amp.

> I also like to shoot skip on sideband and the best place for that is >the freebands.

The best place for that is the ham bands.

> You can run illegally and still be responsible about it.

That's an old and tired excuse. You can't violate the law and be responsible at the same time -- it's an oxymoron. Think about it:

"You can spit on the sidewalk and still be responsible about it."
"You can speed in the freeway and still be responsible about it."
"You can burglarize a house and still be responsible about it."
"You can murder someone with a gun and still be responsible about it."
(and before you condemn me for that last analogy, remember that it's the same analogy -you- used earlier in -your- post).

It just doesn't wash.

> I do >everything I can to make sure I am not coming over phone lines and bleeding >on several channels. I don't use junk export radios, I use low pass filters

It's not just about RFI. It's also about the hogging of a channel by a single dork with an amp. If you increase your power enough to double your range, you are cutting off the channel over an area that could accomodate at least six other people. Double your range again and you cut off 36 -more- potential users. The numbers rise exponentially, and so does the frustration of legal "mud-ducks" trying to talk to someone just down the road.

Using an amp is not just illegal; it's rude, inconsiderate, and it's not how the CB band was intended to be used. If you can't resist the temptation to play hammie then get a license and work the ham bands.

We're interested in finding a couple of lowest cost possible walkie talkies that don't require a license, something we could carry around when we go out, in case we lose each other in the mall or something. Does anything like that exist? Does it come in 900 Mhz or what?

Take a look at the FRS (Family Radio Service) walkie-talkies. Those are what most folks are using today for the application you describe. They can be found at Radio Shack, Home Depot, Wal-Mart, etc. They operate in the mid 400 MHz band.

Channel 10 is our local channel in this area. A lot of the locals with clipped limiters and amps can bleed enough that from 10 miles 4 watts won't always get me help, particularly when I'm in a river bottom surrounded by bluffs.

When my 3 year old grandson drank a bottle of furniture polish, I felt fully justified exceeding the speed limit to get him to the hospital. I didn't cut anyone off or force them off the road to do so. I consider that a responsible breaking of the law.

NO, I stated that eliminating guns would not stop murder. People were killing each other long before firearms were invented. I simply used that anology to point out that eliminating amps would not stop foolish behavior on the C.B.

If I am stranded I'm sure that the C.B. community would understand that I had to break into the regular chit chit long enough to get assistance. I rarely use an amp for AM regular 40. I do sometimes use it on freebands to shoot some skip on SSB. If they were legal mud-ducks, what are they doing on the freebands?

I don't consider it rude to use an amp to get help.
If more hams were to educate C.B.ers on the benifits of becoming a ham instead of treating us like we are the spawn of Satan, maybe I would get my ham ticket. Most of the hams that I have met have been quite rude and I don't wish to waste my time and money on a hobby I don't think I would enjoy.
You do not sound as if you enjoy C.B., maybe you should get your ham ticket so that you can associate with your own kind.

There was a recent thread on the Copper forum discussing how Copper no longer sells amps. I don't shop Copper so I could very well be wrong.

I just checked. All the amps links state that they have none in stock and are not accepting backorders on any of these amps. This may be some sort of smokescreen on Coppers part to avoid problems with the FCC or they may have sold what they had and have not deleted the links yet.

You were defending the sale of illegal radio equipment which, if I'm not mistaken, includes amps. The fact is that if there were fewer amps there would be fewer idiots using them. Same with guns. But guns are legal while CB amps are not. Neither are modified and 'export' radios.
But legal or not, the same rule applies -- the fewer that are in circulation the fewer that will be in use.

I don't know if where you live is anything like the Rockies or the Cascades, but you don't have to walk far to find a spot that will work even with a handheld cellphone. In the deep woods, CB seems to be more reliable than cellphones anyway -- you can usually raise a logging camp or ranger post no matter where you are. But if you plan to go into such remote places where normal services don't work, it's your responsibility to anticipate an emergency and provide for legal communications.

If you are getting that much interference in a radio dead-zone then it isn't much of a radio dead-zone, is it? And if the other end of your comm can't seperate your fundamental from all the QRM then just how 'remote' is this place? Doesn't seem that remote to me. It sounds like you are just making excuses.

It's not hard to get a license. It's been done by hundreds of thousands -- maybe millions -- of people around the world.

And the upper portion of the legal 40 is mostly used for SSB. The FCC didn't declare this rule, but neither did they declare Ch. 9 as the emergency channel. In fact, Ch. 9 used the be the 'calling' channel while other channels were used for emergencies in different zones. It wasn't until about 1970 that Ch. 9 was universally adopted by the CB community as the emergency channel. Anyway, it doesn't take a declaration from the FCC to work SSB anywhere on the legal 40. What the FCC -has- declared is that operation outside the legal 40 -- i.e, the so-called 'freeband' -- is illegal.

The 'freeband' is attractive because many people want a license-free ham band. They want the benefits without the responsibility or the effort. It's that simple.

Ambulances (and other emergency vehicles) have lights, sirens and reflective paints to provide a measure of safety while they drive faster than the speed limit, and sometimes even those measures don't work. So what makes you think you were being responsible by speeding to the hospital without such measures? You endangered the life of your son, yourself, and other people on the road. You took a chance with other people's lives and you got lucky. That's not being responsible.

If you had called for emergency assistance they probably would have sent out paramedics that could have treated your son at the scene, and arrived faster than you made it to the hospital. Of course I expect your next excuse is that you live in a remote location that takes too long for emergency vehicles to respond, or that there's no place for a helicopter to land near your home, or some crap like that. But those are just excuses. The fact is that 911 can provide specific info over the phone on whatever poison you have laying around your house, and provide instructions that can render immediate aid. And because many poisons work fast, that information not only saves lives but prevents excessive injury when the poison is non-fatal. Now THAT would have been the responsible thing to do instead of speeding to the hospital.

Unfortunately, most people don't think about those things until it's too late.

>> "You can burglarize a house and still be responsible about it."

Don't backpedal -- you equated illegal radio equipment with guns so I did the same. You claimed that you violate laws responsibly, an excuse that anyone can see is hogwash when using -your own- analogy. Don't you understand that 'law' is a method of enforcing responsibility?
Basically, law -is- responsibility in a written form. The only way to 'responsibly violate' a law is if there is a more important (and legally justifiable) responsibility. Rushing your son to the hospital would have been such an example if there were no better alternatives.
Regardless, 'freebanding' hardly compares with a medical emergency.

I was talking about amps, but we can talk about the 'freeband', too.
For example, the word 'freeband' is a misnomer. It is not 'free'. That part of the spectrum has been allocated. Part of it is a buffer zone above Ch. 40, and the rest is allocated for private and government services. Freebanders use those freqs because they claim not to hear any activity, which is a logical fallacy -- if freebanders are using those freqs then it's impossible -not- to hear activity. The next excuse is that none of the activity heard is from -licensed- users, which is another fallacy because those freqs are licensed to be used (or not used) as the licensed "mud-ducks" see fit. IOW, just because you don't hear any licensed activity doesn't mean the freqs have been abandoned. If that were the case, 121.5MHz would be a very popular 'freeband' freq.

>> Using an amp is not just illegal; it's rude, inconsiderate, and it's >> not how the CB band was intended to be used. If you can't resist the

>I don't consider it rude to use an amp to get help.

And that's another favorite excuse. The FCC determined that use of illegal equipment for emergencies is only justified if there is no other means available AND the emergency could not have been anticipated and prepared for by other means. IOW, if you know you are going into the deep woods where a cell phone won't work and a legal CB won't work, it is your responsibility (yes, I said 'responsibility') to anticipate the possibility of an emergency and have a plan for legal communications. This was decided in response to a petition by someone trying to void the 155 mile rule by using the same excuse. The FCC didn't buy it, and I don't either. Cell phones cover most of the US. Satellite phones work darn near anywhere except in caves. Ham radio is available from 160m through microwaves, and they even have their own satellite repeaters. There is no valid reason to plan on using illegal radio operation for emergencies when better and legal alternatives exist.

>If more hams were to educate C.B.ers on the benifits of becoming a ham

Not all hams are rude. On the contrary, most hams that I have met are quite agreeable. They are people, just like everyone else. And I don't know why you wouldn't like ham radio when that is basically what you are doing already on the 'freeband'. The only difference is that you would be doing it legally. Does that take the fun out of it for you?

>You do not sound as if you enjoy C.B., maybe you should get your ham ticket >so that you can associate with your own kind.

I do enjoy CB. And it's because I enjoy it that I hate to see it get messed up by idiots with amps, as well as get a worse reputation because of 'freebanders' calling themselves CBers -- CB is legal; freebanding is radio piracy and is a violation of federal law. I'm not a ham, and I don't want a ham license because there is nothing in that service that interests me. If ARRL-of-Borg ever convince the FCC to assimilate the 1750m band, maybe then I'll think about getting a ham license. Until then I'm just a responsible and legal CBer.

You would probably want to look at the Family Radio Service. The radios operate in the 462 MHz range. There are several restrictions on the radios, such as they must be non-modifiable, the antenna has to be a permanent part of the radio and they can not transmit more than 500 mW.
You can find them at almost any store, such as Wal-Mart, K-Mart or Target. If you do pick them up, watch if you get the new FRS/GMRS. These radios allow for the higher power output for the General Mobile Radio Service. However, you need to have a license to operate with the higher power.

That's misleading. You know SOME things first hand. But you are

It's a fact that 75% of OBL's top "commanders" have been either captured or killed. That does not mean the network is gone. But you have to admit it's been severely crippled, at least in the command and control department. They are less able to execute large scale operations. They have been reduced to little "hit and run" bombings.

He is not clueless to the extent of the problem. True, a lot of the recent outsourced jobs are higher skilled, but they are also jobs where there is a lot of competition for.

Your chances are still better if you have an education. You just have to be a little more judicious what vocation you choose when looking into a career. I doubt if they'll be outsourcing doctors, lawyers, or even plumbers any time soon.

Because if we don't outsource manufacturing, we will no longer be competitive with foreign companies. What would you rather have, a company who manufactures overseas, or a company who stays here, for the one or two years until they go belly up?

That "band-aid" is what lessened both the severity and the duration of the recession. Most economists agree that the tax break did what it was supposed to do, and that was to lessen both the severity and the duration of the recession.

For the same reason. As long as the product you manufacture (and advantage of it, since your competitors will.

than the try and predict the effects of complex solutions which have not been tested.

Kerry had been talking about changing the tax code which "rewards" for

Not in that context. But the future brings many opportunities. At least I am confident that we will see this war to an end. An end which will serve both the Iraqi people, and our war on terror.

Pulling out early will mean that the people who made the ultimate sacrifice will have done so for nothing. Vietnam should serve as a lesson in that regard. We should never have pulled out the way we did. As a result, 50K+ soldiers died fighting a war that we ended up losing because we were pressured to pull out when our objectives had not been met. It left behind the notion that Americans do not have the stomach for a long term commitment. Something our current enemies are anxious to exploit. People over here who oppose the war, should keep this in mind.

I find it a bit ironic that so many people claim to support our troops, but oppose the war.

I'd still prefer a democracy to socialism, and a strong leader to governing by consensus.

Surely you jest. Those little 3 inch "radial" kits were nothing more than a gimmick. First of all, they were attached to the "active" side of the antenna, and secondly they were way too small to make any appreciable affect on signal.

To make any difference, it would have to provide a counterpoise which was greater than the surface area of the car the antenna was attached to.

I've known people who ran them, and other than look cool, they did nothing for them........

Bush whored Jessica Lynch and her capture to the media with lies in order to whip the country into a false sense of patriotic fervor to boost his then sagging approval rating. At her time of capture, he said to the country: "She fought valiantly until the end,, mortally wounding and killing several terrorists before she was captured ."
Read her book. She fired not a single shot. She was unconscious from the time of her accident. She woke up in the hospital..the same hospital from which Bush choreographed a Hollywood script from a ROUTINE scheduled pickup in a secured (for over 48 hours) zone, complete with gunfire (no enemy) and acting (soldier yelling "GO! GO! GO!." while firing his M-16 into the sky for the benefit of cameras that just happened to be there (read: scheduled)). She was terrified. She thought she was "going to die" (her own words) from enemy fire (again, there was none) when being evacuated in front of the cameras, hence her terrified expression captured by the camera when being lifted to the helicopter. Meanwhile, a marine was telling her it was all alright, everything was ok, there is no problem, etc.) In live interviews, Jessica repeatedly has said of Bush, "I have no idea why he said those things."
Over 55 million Americans know exactly why.

The only benefit gained by freebanding is more dx than regular cb, and at other times, less crowded than cb 1-40.
Cb has always had less responsibility than hammie radio and stereotyping those who gravitate toward it as folks wanting less responsibility is way overthinking why folks play with cb. Folks play with cb for a mess of reasons, but not wanting "responsibility" has more than likely, not ever been a decision of one when purchasing a radio.

Gee, and to think I spend $20.00 to get the flu shot!

That second approach....I think they are on to something...

How to avoid the flu.

Eat right! Make sure you get your daily dose of fruits and veggies.
Take your vitamins and bump up your vitamin c.
Get plenty of exercise because exercise helps build your immune system.
Walk for at least hour a day, go for a swim, take the stairs instead of the elevator, etc.
Wash your hands often. If you can't wash them, keep a bottle of antibacterial stuff around.
Get lots of fresh air. Open windows whenever possible.
Get plenty of rest.
Try to eliminate as much stress from your life as you can.

OR ... You can take the doctors office approach. Think about it, when you go for a shot, what do they do first? Clean your arm with alcohol. Why?
Because alcohol kills germs. So......

I walk to the liquor store (exercise), I put lime in my Corona (fruit), celery in my Bloody Mary (veggies), drink on the bar patio (fresh air), get drunk, tell jokes, and laugh (eliminate stress) and then pass out (rest).
The way I see it, if you keep your alcohol levels up flu germs can't get you!!!!

You can try FRS (Family Radio Service) radios. They are very small and perform well for the purpose you require. They can be bought new for around $10 each. For more info on these, visit:

http://www.frs-usa.com

You can also use the newer MURS (Multi-use Radio Service) radios. They are VHF radios that use 5 of the VHF business band frequencies. Radios are bigger than FRS, but they do have removable antennas and higher power output. You can get much greater range with MURS. For more info on these, visit:

http://www.murs-usa.com

Both FRS and MURS are license-free services. Try FRS first and see if it suits your needs. If not, you are not out of much money. MURS will cost about $75 or more per radio.

Dave:

I noted increased signal strength with it on, on both transmit and receive..

The star didn't touch the "active" side at all.. it was on the shield side of the equation..

Perhaps the star, being so close to the sheetmetal of the roof (on the magmount), increased the capacitance, thus increasing the capacitive grounding, providing a better RF ground. Who knows. I didn't have the equipment to test for that 10 years ago when I had one I don't now, either.. All I know is, it did more than look cool.

Wrong, and your statement proves conclusively that you never listened objectively to either side. There is no point in going any further with this until you can demonstrate that you can set aside your bias and look at the facts.

Considering I used to support Bush, I doubt it. I changed my position after I lost my job -not- because I'm looking for someone to blame, as you might suspect. The reason I now oppose Bush is because I suddenly had the time to carefully look at all the facts.....

There is so much info that a person must absorb in order to see the big picture, and a lot of people simply don't have the time needed to wade through all the quagmire and make an unbiased evaluation. People like you place your trust in certain sources to tell you the truth. I don't because, in the world of politics, truth is relative and trust is often abused. I depend on facts and logic. I can give you the facts, but I can't make you think logically. That is a choice only -you- can make.

Like the Bible? No, my literary education is a little more diverse. It includes books by such authors as Socrates, Kant, DesCartes, Thoreau, Conrad, London, Steinbeck, Dickens, Adams, Verne, Wells, Orwell, and Jefferson, just to name a few. It also includes political and social ideology from television shows such as Star Trek and, more recently, South Park. My personal experiences are also a contributing factor to how I "base my entire life", only part of which involves Beirut. I was in the Marines, which is a lifetime in and of itself. I have been to Norway, Israel, Turkey, Spain, Ireland, Australia, Mexico and Canada. I have seen a lot of the US from Alabama to Maine to California to Alaska, and many points inbetween. I have been rich and I have been homeless. I have had a child and I have lost a child. I have held good jobs and bad jobs. I have been fired a few times, once just for being an atheist.....

I could go on, but I think it's clear that I don't base my life as you suggest -- on the narrow-minded "teachings" of a particular book.

I was referring to freebanding, not CB. You are correct, people are attracted to CB for a variety of reasons, only one of which is the licence-free aspect. But again, the CB is not the freeband, and the latter is used mostly by those who want to play hammie without the responsibility or accountability of a license. I have no problem stereotyping -freebanders- into that category, which is what I did.

Yeah, that's Bill. you shouldn't hear him very well since the audio output of the radio isn't supposed to be carrying his mic audio. I'll fix that soon though.

Thanks for help with testing. Are you on a high speed connection? or modem?

Ok, let's see how this grabs you: Establish a political party that would perform certain functions: it would compile all relevant facts about the candidates, evaluate each candidate based on their history and their intentions, support the candidate who is best qualified to serve the public based on those evaluations, then publish the results in both comprehensive and simplified formats. It would offer no candidates of its own. If a member of the party intends to run for office, they must do so as an independant. And no party member may be a member of any other party.

Think about it..... This would be a 'non-partisan party', for lack of a better term. People would no longer be forced to sift through tons of spin, propoganda and media bias to get the facts. They would have -all- the facts relevant to -all- the candidates assembled all in one nice, neat, unbiased package.

So whad'ya think?

Sounds like an excellent idea. If more people spent more time on the net and found out what's really going on, there would be less voting a straight party, and more voting for those candidates that really mean what they say, regardless of the party affiliation. You can do it yourself, but today, as you stated, most are either too lazy or too busy to do their homework.

Your more than welcome to go fishing, hunting, 4 wheeling with me and bring your cell. It might be usefull for telling time but useless to talk on in some places that I frequent. You obviously live in an area with great cell

I have used the upper 40 on SSB. But found that many people talk AM on those freqs. which makes it hard to use SSB for DXing. You can wave the illegal flag all you want, I will still use the freeband.

You can wait on the ambulance if you choose. I live in a rural area and by

Yes a chopper could land in the field behind my house. The chopper happens

No it doesn't. It may very well be fun. In fact there are a lot of good things I would like about ham radio, mostly the tech side. I didn't state all hams are bad, just the ones I have talked to, they tend to treat C.B.ers as second class citizens and I won't be a part of that.

Good for you. I'll stick to freebanding.

Thanks for your support Sheeople

Now that the president has been reelected by people whom have had the wool pulled over their eyes, hang on. It's going to be a rough ride.

The plans have already been laid to reinstate the draft. Don't believe me? Google these two words: (1) Bush, and (2) Draft. You will be shocked. It does not bode well for your friends, loved ones, and co-workers. The facts were there, but were effectively hidden by the GOP. And to boot, think your acquaintances will be safe by being in college or leaving the country? Not so, that's there too. Education will not be a reason to avoid the draft, and extradition treaties have been upgraded to make sure no country is a safe haven for draft dodgers. And unlike Bush, you can't enlist in the Guard to keep safe either.

Cost of the war? To date, the cost is over $143,000,000,000. That's billions folks. Remember the tax refund check you got? Well, hope you didn't spend it; you'll need that and a lot more to pay for Bush's little game.

War on terror? Ha! Now that IS funny! Now think back to 9/11. Who flew those planes into the towers? I don't believe it was Saddam, or any Iraqi, was it? It WAS Saudi Arabians and a few other nationalities. Have we taken those countries to task? Why are we in Iraq?

Afghanistan and the Taliban? What happened there? Well, we dropped a few bombs and then we ran off to Iraq, whom we promptly attacked. Why? Does the word "oil" ring a bell? And let's see...where did the Bush clan make its money? Purely coincidence, I'm sure. The argument that we were liberating an oppressed people does not hold water, as there are many other countries that are ruled by unfair heads of state. But then again, they are not sitting atop a lake of oil.

Now then, what can you do? Well, I suggest you write your congressman, your senator, and even the president to inform them that you want us to exit Iraq. This applies whether you voted for Bush or Kerry. We cannot sustain this war financially, morally, or physically. If you believe otherwise, please do yourself a favor and pull your head out of the sand. The facts do not lie.

...and your point is? I'm not mopar.

You are either for the gay political positions and support their lifestyle or you are against it. To not have a position is to have taken a position, if you are not against it then you are for it. There is no middle ground.

You are a real nutcase, aren't you? What the hell does the gender of another's sexual partner concern you? Why would you care either way? There is lots of middle ground. I am against you being allowed to have a say-so in anything, but then again, that's not my right, now is it? As such, you can now take your lame argument elsewhere. You don't matter.

There is middle ground, you choose not to see it. This issue does not affect my life in any way. Therefore I have no position on it. That does not make me for or against the issue. The news stated that the gay marriage issue was a deciding factor in GWB's reelection, but while I waited in line to vote, that issue never entered my mind.

The 6JU6 tubes are gone but its all complete with cover and nothing looks burn't or moded that I can tell!
Of course its untested & being sold for parts or restore it if you like:-)
Price is a big $15 + postage(13lbs from 11758)

Your statement was in opposition to the OP who suggested that the sale of illegal equipment should be curbed. To me that sounds like you are defending the sale of those items.

....huh? The law isn't perfect and neither are people. But that's not a valid excuse to violate the law. Yet you go one step further and justify the expense and effort of illegal operation as a forethought towards an emergency situation. Well, if emergency communications is important enough to demand that much thought and effort, illegal operation is probably the -worst- choice. As I stated before, there are other methods that are both better and legal, and not suprisingly enough they require less effort and expense than illegal operation.

Add to that the practical uselessness of the freeband as an emergency communications channel -- it's no better than CB in that communication with emergency services is, at best, a bucket-brigade. You can get direct comm to emergency services using satellite and cell phones, and even using ham radio via skip or satellite. This saves not only time (which can be critical in an emergency situation), but also prevents the miscommunication that usually accompanies "human repeaters" (you played that 'pass-the-message' game in grade school, didn't you?).

On the contrary, it is -you- that is making excuses to run illegally. If you are in a radio dead-zone then how does your signal get out at all? It won't.

I live in Spokane, WA. I have worked with a couple logging companies in both the Cascades and Rockies (which is why I mentioned those two mountain ranges previously). You can bet that there are places where comm sucks. There are large areas where there is no cell phone coverage, at least not officially. But at those altitudes, all you need to do is climb up to a peak with a 3-watt phone and you can easily hit a cell tower 50 miles away. If you don't believe me, take note of a recent incident on Mt. Rainier where a climber was rescued after contacting a hunter 40 miles away with his FRS.

And if you are in a canyon or deep valley, it doesn't matter how much power you run, there's nothing you can do on radio unless you have VLF or satellite.

In case you hadn't noticed, the ham bands have much more spectrum and MUCH better DX conditions. Seems to me that ham DX would be much easier than freebanding.

> You can wave the illegal
>flag all you want, I will still use the freeband.

That pretty much sums up your argument -- you'll do it because you want to. No valid reasons, no legal justification, and no regard for better alternatives. It all boils down to the fact that you want the benefits without the license. Am I wrong? If I am then at least provide a -legitimate- reason for violating the law because your other excuses are bogus.

.....uh, yeah. right. You live xx miles from the hospital. If you leave your home at the same time the ambulance leaves the hospital, and you are both driving the same speed, you each get to your destination at about the same time. But in the process you have risked the lives of your son, yourself and others on the road by your urgent driving, you have further endangered your son because he may not have been in a condition stable enough to transport, and while you were driving to the hospital you could have been administering first aid from directions given by professionals over the phone. You can make any excuse you want, you can try the what-if-it-was-your-kid sympathy trip, you can plead the concerned-father routine, and you can even justify your actions by the fact that you were lucky and nobody got hurt. But the fact is it would have been better to stay home talking with 911 and wait for emergency services to arrive.

You are starting to sound like my grandma did when she talked about boiled down to something like, "What if the car catches fire and I can't undo my seatbelt because I'm unconscious?" Even my 80 yo granny finally figured out that she was just making excuses because she simply didn't want to wear a seatbelt. If my grandma can figure it out, why can't you?

I don't. I rent one when I need it. They don't cost that much to rent when you are only going out for a week or so at a time. And the expense is well worth the security, as I have found out more than once. But ham radio has it's own satellites which don't cost a penny, and the equipment isn't any more expensive than one of those 'export' radios or a big amp. Also, in the past few years I have been playing with LF and VLF. For example, the 1750m (lowfer) band is license-free, and one watt will give you -reliable- comm for 30+ miles in -any-terrain -- even better in the winter months (-despite- all the band noise). And it's suprisingly cheap, comparable in cost to a legal CB radio setup.

So -that- excuse doesn't wash, either.

another opportunity to debunk the standard lineup of lame excuses that

Well Frank, you know I off road a lot, and there are times where both Ham & cb freqs will work, with a little extra help and cells don't work worth the powder to blow them up.
I was at a Bronco event in Ariz, we were between canyon walls, doing some serious rock crawling, one rig was trying to traverse the 6.5" rock wall. Well he broke his spring perch, nobody had a portable welder on them. Got on the radio, his rig was stock, another person had a rig with a 100 watts, fired it up, got a hold a someone a couple miles away. He wheeled in and welded up the spring perch. We could've hiked up to a point and got a cell signal, but back at the camp, cell signals were non existent, so the radio came to work better.

Now I too am also fast becoming a believer in sat phones, almost anywhere you can get a signal, just like the sat radio (XM) which I subscribed too now.

I found that digital phones are far more fussy than their old analog predecessors. And some services just plain suck for coverage.

Well now you have been reading this group long enough to know that there could be a multitude of reasons why that is. I might be inclined to believe that terrain was a factor if I knew that the stock radio was working properly and had a good..... hold the phone: he busted his suspension on a 6.5" rock wall? What were these rigs -- RC cars?

I don't have much interest in XM -- takes the fun out of long trips. I actually enjoy fiddling with the radio, finding local stations and hearing what's going on in the town I'm passing through. But I'm rapidly losing interest in that, too, now that most of the stations are controlled by the broadcast monopolies and sound pretty much the same.

Just curious, can you get AM local advisory stations with an XM radio?

You have to watch what you read on the net. As they used to say; "The paper doesn't refuse ink" and that pretty much applies to the net.
Anyone can put up a website (Even that idiot Michael Moore), and slant their information to support their own ideology. The net is the antithesis of the mainstream media. The mainstream media collects and distributes only what they want you to see. While the net opens the flood gates and you have to do your own filtering. It's not always easy, because many propagandists can make even the most dubious information look good and convincing.

A third party "No spin" candidate won't work for the simple reason that people are all human, and as such will eventually start doing the same things to enhance their "electability" that the current party candidates do.

An independent candidate will have a long uphill road, as long as the majority of people feel that the third party does not have a chance of winning, so therefore they won't risk throwing away their vote.

Having a totally "non-partisan" "oversight" committee, is probably a good idea in theory. But I have my doubts about maintaining their non-biased integrity. There are many temptations that could be offered and it would take a very strong person not to be swayed by those temptations. You would almost need an oversight committee to watch the oversight committee to keep everyone honest. But something like this could go a long way to diffusing the spin and claims of some candidates in their political ads.

Hello Frank:

Are ya all talking to me?!??!?!?!?

I am running out of room for my site, but my contract says I am allowed way more meg-o-bits of room.

The stuff all looks good. The steam powered CW radio looks great.

I have more antennas going on the web site as we keep perfecting the Crusader 10K, 5 Element Yagi Beam Antenna, and Super Crusader 10/20K, 7 Element Yagi Beam Antenna.

I have been asked to modify a Moonraker 4 Element Beam Antenna. This would be using the 2 inch CNC Machined Hubs, a upgraded and internally reinforced 2 inch Boom, replacing the 1 5/8 inch Boom, and original Boom to Element Brackets. And maybe replacing the Gamma Matches, with a Hairpin and Balun.

And on the back burner I have a Quad type antenna called a Monsoon for the two element version, Monsoon II for the 4 element version, and a Typhoon for the 6 element version.

So I am sure I will fill up, and soon half to pay more money for the site space.

Woah! Back up. What do you mean by "People like me?" You know nothing from what makes the most sense when reduced to the lowest common

I do exactly the same. It makes no logical sense to assume things for which there is no evidence to support. Is it logical to believe the war in Iraq was totally about commandeering their oil supply, when you consider the amount of money and lives we're already spent on it? If this were the case, would it not make more sense to do what the French and the Germans have done instead? Human nature has shown that people will take the path of least resistance toward their goal. The path we are taking in Iraq is not the easiest path if the goal is oil domination. That's also where Occam's Razor comes into play.

For some inescapable reason, many people have taken certain other people, who have had moments of insight, and then elevate them to near god-hood. Once again, the paper doesn't refuse ink, and all of us are simply flawed human beings, and far from perfect or all knowing. The problem with hanging on the words of people long dead, is that times have changed and some of what these "great" authors have written is obsolete.

I don't know how many times I have been in debates with people who cite some book as "proof" that they are right. I usually point out that unless the book is a strictly factual text, a book is only the print form of an author's editorial opinion, and subject to their own internal bias. Karl Marx wrote a book too, but I wouldn't agree with what he proposed as a viable or even desirable government when you consider the nature of human beings and the incredible influence of greed.

You should read a few more. Try reading a little Marx, Nietzsche, Sartre, and even Hitler, to see the limits of what some people try to pass off as their "truth". Much of what they write is insightful to a point, if for no other reason then to establish a point of reference by which the relativity of our current political system is gauged against. But some of it is downright scary.

> It also includes political and social >ideology from television shows such as Star Trek and, more recently,

Both of these shows use their fictional universe to draw parallels to common political and social issues of today. Since South Park tends to lampoon much of it in order to showcase just how ridiculous much of it is, I usually laugh at the irreverence of the writers, and usually agree with their message about the insanity of it all.

Star Trek, on the other hand, takes a more serious look at certain issues. Sometimes this bothers me as I am more into the "tech" aspect of the show than the exploration of social parallels. I liked it better when Kirk just shot at the Klingons, and Scotty was always finding some Rube Goldberg method of getting out of a jam. When I was a kid, that might have been the first inspiration I had to become an engineer. I was distressed to hear that since the latest show's ratings have been a bit sluggish, they've decided to move the focus away from the tech angle and focus on (you guessed it!) more of a sex and relationship angle. Great, a soap opera in space. Maybe they should get rid of cap't Archer and replace him with cap't Stubbing.....

Well, you've certainly been more places than I have, and I suppose that gives you another perspective. I'm curious how you could be rich, and then poor? Most people who know the formula for becoming rich, can do it again.

I've traveled to some points of the country, mostly on business. I find that the more you see, the more it all looks the same.

Well at least Kerry isn't a total idiot. But how can he spin the fact that outsourcing is a corporate fact of life into some sort of affront against the Bush administration? He also never explained how he would reverse this trend other than to say (over a dozen times) "I have a plan". I suspect that he wouldn't want to explain the reality of the situation in too much detail as the people might understand a little better and he'd lose a political lever.

No, not wrong. That is precisely what he did. He blamed the loss of jobs on outsourcing (Which according to the labor statistics only a small percentage of the total job loss was due to outsourcing), and condemned the Bush administration for "allowing it". As if the government has any business interfering in the free market in the first place. History will show that the more government interferes with business, the more it ultimately disrupts it.

Interestingly Kerry had a lot to say about outsourcing, but was curiously quiet about "insourcing", the creation of jobs in this country by foreign corporations. It would seem that the amount of jobs lost to outsourcing, have been offset to a significant degree by jobs created by "insourcing".

Maybe you need to research a few more facts before we continue.....

But you do understand how it would be difficult to understand how a series of small radials could do a better job at being a counterpoise than the large amount of metal in the car body? A good counterpoise is all about surface area. For a counterpose to be effective at CB frequencies, the radial length has to be at least a 1/8th wave which is about 4.5 feet.

The numbers just don't add up. But this isn't the first time I've heard people swear that some "product" they bought improved their performance, and it made no logical sense from an engineering standpoint, so who knows......

I love my XM, Keep in mind your radio still works! You don't get AM advisories but you CAN tune over to AM. XM has also instituted an emergency channel for times when things get bad. CH 247. They did volcano coverage, etc. I want to see what they do when the tornado belt gets rolling!

If you only listen to talk radio XM is not for you but to listen to music, COMEDY (yes!), or anything else it's the best $10 a month I spend!

I'm on really flat land, first off, we're talkin' REALLY FLAT, that may make a difference. I usually get pelted by the normal ch6, ch11 everything else is fairly quiet down there except 19, which is obvious. I started monotoring ch 9 on the bench while doing repairs, I stopped when I could not listen to music because the spanish gibberish and swearing was too much for the squelch to keep it down for effective safety monotoring. Same thing happened in the pickup with just a 3' Firestik and the former cheapo cobra, so I know it's not my "amazing" base antenna :) Dunno, maybe I'm just in the right spot, where are you located Frank? I'm in Central Illinois. Pretty far away from Mexico or other spanish speaking countries.

No, bad typing, 6.5'. 2 rigs out of 5 made it up without being winched. Only one rig got the most damage (the one with broken perch's). Well one rig had a cobra radio, can't remember the model with a 102". It was working fine in my opinion, got out good to the camp most of the time when at altitude. The other radio's seemed to work ok, I remember when we went ahead

On my Pioneer, XM is like the Aux mode, so you can switch between regular & XM with a push of the button. As for "local", it depends on which station your listening too at the time ;)

I never cited the book as any sort of "proof" of anything. I just suggested you read it. It's not a long book -- in fact it's quite short by modern standards. But you will have no clue about the content until you read it. You might get a taste of it from Cliff notes or comments from other people, but until you read it in its entirety you will have no clue why I even mentioned the book at all.

Yeah, it's lost the adventure aspect of the show. And it's lost much of that 'in-your-face' attitude about social and political issues that you only see on South Park today. Although they seem to be testing the Airports all look the same. Instead, take a few days and take the bus very cool places are Danville, VA, Hendersonville, NC, Bangor, ME, Albany, OR, Parker Dam, AZ, and of course Seattle. Some of the -worst-

I don't. I lean -against- the Bush regime. There are decent Democrats

Bush has gone a step above and beyond responsible behavior. It's too bad that the Republicans feel the need to support that criminal

Not sure what post you are replying to, but my reply was regarding the analogy of driving a car. I certainly was never attempting to convey that you agreed or disgreed with any of the above.

Ah, you know how it is,,the two who delude themselves with imagined Phd status are ready to tell you all about yourself, for no charge, on the internet, in a semi-obscure cb group. You can't buy this sort of entertainment without contributing to the Jim Henson Memorial Fund.

Brrrr...making me shiver just thinking about it. We just shut the A/C off not long ago....camping and hunting season is here (finally). From this month through March,,,,nothing is finer than this here latitude and longitude. While the great white north shivers, I'm doing the Jimmy Buffet thing. It's pretty easy when Bush comes out in a press conference and says that outsourcing of jobs to foreign countries is actually -good- for the US economy.

He gave a brief outline in the debate, but I don't suspect you heard that, either. He also outlined the plan in more detail on his website, which I'm sure you never read or you wouldn't be asking the question.

You said, and I quote: "All he ever did was lambast the companies who do it, without (of course) ever providing the details of what he would do differently." First, he did plenty more than to "lambast" the practioners of outsourcing. Second, he -did- provide details of how he would do things different. You are wrong on both counts.

>Maybe you need to research a few more facts before we continue.......

I'm still waiting for "facts" that back up the stories you have come up with so far. But if you want facts, here are a few facts that are not in dispute by anyone:

- Bush admitted that Saddam posed no imminent threat;
- No trace of WMDs were found, not even evidence that they even existed;
- The US has more nuclear, biological and chemical weapons than any other country in the world;
- Saddam was given weapons-grade biological specimens under GHW Bush's administration;
- Halliburton won a no-bid contract for reconstruction costs;
- Bush's reason for the no-bid award was that there wasn't time for a bidding process;
- The decision to go into Iraq was made more than a year before the invasion;
- The bidding process for a Pentagon contract does not require more than one year;
- Cheney was CEO of Halliburton before he became VP;
- Rumsfeld is a long-time political partner of Cheney;
- Rumsfeld runs the Pentagon, and therefore the military;

- The military is responsible for damage done during the invasion;
- The repairs to damage done by the military are done by the contractors;
- The contractors are selected by the Pentagon (Rumsfeld);
- The Pentagon (Rumsfeld) selected only one contractor: Halliburton.
- Rumsfeld continues to refuse bidding on additional contracts for the rebuilding of Iraq, instead tacking the additional costs onto the Halliburton contract;
- Halliburton is under investigation by the DOJ for overcharging the government;
- DOJ and Pentagon policy is to freeze a contract pending the results of a DOJ investigation;
- Rumsfeld refuses to freeze the Halliburton contract;
- The damage to the infrastructure in Iraq was 10 times worse than the first war (Pentagon's own estimate);
- Resistance to the invasion was significantly less than the first war (as noted by media around the world, and by the Pentagon itself);
- One military plan (the MacGregor plan) would have done little damage to Iraq (in both lives and property) and would have accomplished the invasion in much less time, but was rejected by Rumsfeld;
- The recommended military plan (Sec. of the Army, et.al.) would have secured the country with large numbers of troops instead of heavy bombardment, but was rejected by Rumsfeld;
- Rumsfeld fired the Pentagon generals and advisors who recommended the latter plan.

The facts are all there and they are not in dispute. There is only one picture that can be painted with these facts. You may not like the picture, but reality doesn't need your vote.

Yea, but to me it was one of the defining moments when Bush expressed his disdain for the troops (Jessica) and the people with such a magnificent, deliberate lie in order to further his personal agenda.
Plus, it's a matter not a single Bush supporter is willing to touch. For

I was never a demo or a Kerry fan. I was registered repub and was very involved during the college years. I deserted the GOP when Reagan stained it (second term) beyond what it has since been capable of repair. I take solace in the notion GW gets to clean up his own mess and can't run again. Trust me on this economic thing,,,,,there will be record mortgage foreclosures in this term of Herr Bush. During the time of low interest rates when folks should have been eliminating debt, the majority increased their debt with bigger and more expensive homes and loans and second homes, etc. The real estate bubble was the only thing temporarily holding up this economy for the last few years. That's about to come to a shocking, realizing halt for many of those who took out ARM's opposed to straight fixed conventionals. Are you smiling at the pump? I know I am.,,,,does it matter at all if we get to $5.00 a gallon..you know, because as the Bush tax code allows, folks like you

Flight deck,,flight suit,,banner that said "Mission Accomplished". Bush claimed at the time, the Navy placed the banner there (a deliberate lie). When the Navy complained, Bush admitted his scouting staff placed the banner on deck.
"Choreographer" fits this scenario to the "T". Thanks for suggesting the >responsibility or the effort.

Compared to WHAT?

>Ham radio.

The only benefit gained by freebanding is more dx than regular cb, and at other times, less crowded than cb 1-40. Cb has always had less responsibility than hammie radio and stereotyping those who gravitate toward it as folks wanting less responsibility is way overthinking why folks play with cb. Folks play with cb for a mess of reasons, but not wanting "responsibility" has more than likely, not ever been a decision of one when purchasing a radio.

I don't believe that. I wasn't even aware of hammie radio when I started swapping crystals and going in between freqs. And again, many freebanders are not of the US origin and have no concept of hammie radio, let alone opinion of or attempts to imitate it.

>I have no problem stereotyping -freebanders-

Yea, but it's not even close to being valid. The freeband has its share of hammies from here and abroad.

And no effort at all is required to change the dial.

>Or to turn up the squelch.

HF dx chasers need it wide open,,,the freeband takes all comers, good and bad, which mostly happens to be polite and courteous users. There is more bleed and discontent to be found on cb AM than the freeband.

It worked very well. I want to tweak it a little though. I don't know how many listeners it takes to bring it down. It was set at a high quality so I can picture serious lag if a lot of people connect. I'll lower it a little and see if I can get several people to log on at once. This will give us a better picture of quality vs. number of simultaneous connections. I'll let you know when. I'm sure we'll be doing more testing tonight and over the next few days if we have time.

I'm very new to this whole world of 2 way radios and scanners.

I'd like to make this into a new hobbie and I'm not sure which direction to take. Scanners are for passive listening, I figure with a scanner I can listen to the towns policemen and fire as well as what the pilots are saying in their cessnas and small jetplanes.

I live in a small town of roughly 27,000 people and there should be plenty of things to pick up on a scanner.

Only, can a two way radio pick up the same stuff as a scanner? With a Two way CB radio can I talk to people in my town as well as the next town over north and south of my town? There is about a 5 to 8 mile separation and we do have some topography here. I'm only planning on using a simple indoor antenna, a desktop unit.

Is a scanner the better deal? With a scanner can it pick up so many more signals than a CB? With a scanner will I have more stuff to listen to than a CB? Do scanners have a larger bandwidth? Is that what it's called when the unit can pick up more channels than another?

TIA!

Get both! A scanner typically is 30mhz and above. CB is in the 27mhz range.
There are a few scanners that cover the CB band (Radioshack Pro-95 for one).
In order to talk to the other towns on the CB you will more than likely need a outdoor antenna. Do a google search on ham radio/scanners/shortwave and you should find TONS of info on it.

In a matter of speech. The recession was no more Bush's fault than the economic boom in the late 90's was Clinton's doing. Neither one was responsible. The market controls its own destiny.

Where is the proof?

BTW, the banner was referring to the mission of the ship which was returning home, not the war in general. It was no lie, as the ship did return after accomplishing its mission.

I don't get anything free, but you pose an incredibly lucid postulation. Yes, the real estate market was growing in leaps and bounds for reasons which seem to defy logic. It's bound to cool off.
Likely, it'll cool off as the fed starts raising interest rates to compensate for the growing economy.

My prediction is that the home market will cool, but by that time other areas of the economy will have recovered enough to cover any additional losses by the R.E. market. That's pretty much what happened in the early 90's....

Smoke and mirrors. I watched each debate intensely. Kerry didn't have time to go into the fine details that people like me wanted to hear.
The nexus of his "plan" revolved around revoking the "incentives" that encourage job outsourcing. But when you understand the fine print, you will see that this only amounts to changing when and how profits are ultimately taxed. It will do little to reverse a practice which is driven by much stronger market forces. In simple terms, it was misleading.

I was paraphrasing. Please don't go all literal, on me. His details were hollow and not a guarantee. And a cornerstone of his campaign (Once he decided which side of the Iraq issue he was going to stick with), was to blame Bush for allowing companies to take advantage of tax credits which supposedly promote outsourcing. Have you read the tax code that all this refers to? I have and believe me, it's not as big a deal as Kerry wanted us to believe, and his changes would not have changed much in the grand scheme of things.

We know they once existed. Everyone is clear about that. Saddam used them before. The fact that we found no new evidence is, in itself, meaningless. Absence of evidence is not evidence of absence. I say they moved to Syria. As long as this remains a possibility, you can't conclude otherwise, without reasonable doubt.

But we had no way of knowing that before we went in. You keep looking at these facts with hindsight, and then using them to discredit a decision made before it happened. We fully expected to encounter chemical weapons. We moved the way we did to minimize the chances of their use. Once again, we had the lives of American soldiers to consider.

I would say the risk of heavy equipment is better than the risk of soldier's lives. You should know better. I'm sure the families of the soldiers would agree. Besides, our technology has advanced to the point that smart missiles and bombs can do the work that ground forced used to do. Again, it's preferred to high soldier casualties.

But do you know all the inside details surrounding the reasons why? No, of course not. You'd rather just make more unfounded conjectures.

You seem to have a very loose definition of what constitutes a "fact"......

Bush term than Clinton was the last. Excellent observation, Mopar.

That is so untrue. Many things affect the market and "destiny" is not one of them. Presidential acts (such as NAFTA) affect the market,,,,,,,,consumer confidence (spending by consumers) as illustrated in the faith the citizens have in their leaders affect it,,..the president and his actions have a direct effect on the market on a daily basis. All one need do is tune in to watch the NYSE for an afternoon or read anything by Milton Friedman for a layman's understanding.

Bush is the leader of the country and all responsibility ends with him. Rumsfeld said, of Hussein and WMDS "He has them. We know he has them. We know where they are." This was an official speaking on behalf of the president. The president said the invasion of Iraq was necessary to "stop the proliferation or transfer" of wmds by Iraq. And before you ask for "proof", yes, I can cite you quotes and dates and even admittances of the Bush administration that they set forth these and many other direct-contradictions of themselves.
Since the wmds were not found, that means they were never there, or the Bush admin FAILED in their objective,,,,,stopping their transfer or proliferation.

You already acknowledged the public screwing Bush put to Jessica Lynch with his lies.

>What lies? Prove it! I want to see proof, by a >verifiable source that Bush LIED about Lynch

>on anything else for that matter.

With all due respect, Dave, you're not up to date on the party you blindly defend at all cost.
You're not even aware of the statements the Bush administration issued concerning the banner. Heck, you have shown you weren't even aware what was discussed in the debates, let alone paying attention when Bush told the entire country on live TV how Jessica "fought valiantly until the end, mortally wounding several terrorists before being captured." You want proof of something only you seem to have missed, but I am perfectly content on watching you tell the masses, once again, what they saw with their own eyes and heard with their own ears somehow did not take place.

I was never a demo or a Kerry fan. I was registered repub and was very involved during the college years. I deserted the GOP when Reagan stained it (second term) beyond what it has since been capable of repair. I take solace in the notion GW gets to clean up his own mess and can't run again. Trust me on this economic thing,,,,,there will be record mortgage foreclosures in this term of Herr Bush. During the time of low interest rates when folks should have been eliminating debt, the majority increased their debt with bigger and more expensive homes and loans and second homes, etc. The real estate bubble was the only thing temporarily holding up this economy for the last few years. That's about to come to a shocking, realizing halt for many of those who took out ARM's opposed to straight fixed conventionals. Are you smiling at the pump? I know I am.,,,,does it matter at all if we get to $5.00 a gallon..you know, because as the Bush tax code allows, folks like you and I get it free as a business expense. It's everyone else who suffers.

>I don't get anything free,

This incorrectly assumes the feds seek to stem a growing economy. Besides, the feds already raised the rates.

>My prediction is that the home market will

>cool, but by that time other areas of the >economy will have recovered enough to cover

Only the RE market isn't the only loss from which you have to select, it is merely the LAST one you have to select since it was the only thing propping up this farce of economic improvement heralded by the lying Bush administration. The dollar is at a fifteen year low again and they completely rewrote the way debt is calculated since they didn't like the answers they received under the formula that had always been in place. Need proof of that, too?
Such manipulations of the stats and numbers equate fuzzy math. Bush lost 300,000 well paying jobs (above 30 G) in his first QUARTER as president and ultimately ended up adding half a million McJobs,, paying substandard wages. He called this "adding jobs" and "job improvement". Need proof of that, too? Under Bush, the economic leading index fell 3 points under his first half of term, then rebounded almost a full point and a half almost 8 months later. Bush called this "improving the economy" and said it was because of his tax cuts. Getting the economy to not even where it was when he took office is NOT improving the economy.

Besides,,,,,,,,,,,,
Those would have to be some pretty heavy and main-stream "areas" that affect the majority of the US populace to makeup for the incredible massive record setting deficit Bush has the country owing. What areas are you predicting will rebound so strongly as to set incredible growth and earnings records in this term (which would have to take place to offset

Is it my news reader or is it that you don't know how to participate in a news group discussion? It seems that your replies end up in odd places. The thread is thata-way --->

Anywayz, I find that most hams that look down on CB'rs don't wait to find out what set of frequencies the CBr prefers. I was told I was CB trash back when I first keyed a radio at the age of 12. The ham never even knew me. He just happend to be next door wroking (10m I'll guess) when my freind and I hung a 1/4 wave whip out my 2nd floor window, switched to channel 14 said "breaker".

He was a dick back then, if he's still alive he's probably a dick today, and if he's a troll, he's probably trolling this group being a dick right now. Who knows, maybe if it weren't for so many dicks like him, there'd be more licensed hams.

Oh bullshit and liberal demagoguery...if we wanted Iraq's oil, and this was all about petro-capitalism, why didnt we just support the lifting of oil sanctions on Iraq? Stupid people who repeat what they hear from other stupid people dont understand that lifting the sanctions would have been waaay cheaper than the present course. Ahhh, but I am sure you don't want common sense to interfere with your spouting of such an idiotic tangent.

As for saying that Iraq was not involved in terrorism, you could not be more full of shit unless you swan dived into an outhouse pit with your mouth wide open. What about the airplane hijacking school that Iraqi intelligence ran? What about the meetings with members of the 9/11 perps in europe by Iraqi intelligence? No weapons of mass destruction? Riiiiight. I suppose he just flew over the Kurds in the north and farted on 'em, ay? How about the Shiites in the south...did he bomb them with filthy underwear or something? How about the Iranian army? Did he line up his 1000 stinkiest troops and blow their smell at the Iranians with giant fans?

Nukes? Well 1) The Russians currently have no clue as to the wherabouts of 48 man packable, Hiroshima yeild nukes missing from their inventory. 2) read the book "Saddam's Bombmaker" to get an accurate picture of the status of the WMD programs in Iraq prior to the invasion.

WMD programs are way too important to the nutjobs over there to let them be captured intact by western forces...You think that MAYBE, some OTHER country...MIGHT have had a reason to get as much men and WMD material out of Iraq before we showed up? Hmmmm...guess that would conflict with all the attitudes espoused by the liberal heads in the sand.

Finally, and I am actually suprised that the Bush campaign did not make this a big issue...bin Laden wrote an open letter to America...he said that we must convert to Islam, denounce Israel, and help destroy the Jews and their country, or he would see us all dead. Seems to me if he had his way, people with your views would be most amazed as you were led to the post that you were to be tied to and then shot...I would speculate that your utterly incredulous last words, before some junior grade Hitler wanna be said "SILENCE, INFIDEL DOG!", would be something like....."Booo Hooo Hooo...I never supported Bush and his war for oil!"

Now, read some books, google some stuff, learn about reality...and purchase a few clues at the clue store. Then you may have a realistic picture of what the civilized world has to deal with at the hands of these monsters. I see a lot of slamming of the present course, but not one bit of offering of alternatives. Again the liberal weenies take the easy course....they were trained well by their weenie in chief, Bill Clinton.

Oh my God. I just checked what was on the market and I think it's so strange that these Scanners and CB radios have shrunk/gotten so small. Before these radios took up whole rooms, and then they took up the space of a tower desktop computer -- just like in the pictures. Now I see both Scanners and CB radios that are all hand held that look like they run on batteries. What type of batteries I don't know if they are the simple AA Alkaline or Lithium Ion or whatever. I don't trust those small hand held scanners with their attached antenna on them. Firstly, they don't look very powerful -- becuase of the small size I'm afraid the range probably isn't too great. And secondly, what if it breaks? That compact size would make it imposible for someone to repair it, also being so small I would imagine it might heat up too hot if you run it for too long and have some serious concequences on the internal circuitry. Won't it heat up and melt the electronic stuff inside if it's that small and compact?

Obviously much of the scanners and CB radios are not what I had in mind. I was thinking it would be a flat Desktop unit about the size of a lap top computer only shorter and thicker with an attachment for whatever antenna on the back. Something that plugs right into the 120 Volt outlet instead of running on batteries. I can't believe this, the batteries on these new CB's and Scanners probably don't last long at all. I would imagine that they run out in an hour or so.

Please tell me it's not as bad as I think they might be. I was looking at Radio Shacks online catalog selection. Would anyone recommend radio shack or is it always best to go to a different electronics store in town that's family owned and operated?

What is the life expectancy of these new radios?

What thought and effort or expense? Thought? No cell service I'll pick up the mike. Effort? Look at cell phone then turn knob on and key mike.
Expense? I already own the equipment, some of it is over 15 years old. Your putting too much thought and effort into trolling me for an arguement.

I never stated I used the freeband for emergancy use. I use the freeband for DXing. I use channel 10 to raise the locals for an emergancy. Can you not read or are you seeing things that are not there. You are clearly confused.

No, it saves time by raising the locals who can make a quick phone call for me. Using your method of ham skip is outright stupid.
Contrary to your delusion, I was a good student. No I did not pass notes.

You stated it was a dead zone, not me. I stated that there was no cell service. How many times do I need to repeat this before you grasp the concept?

Funny how I can still get out on CB but not a cell. Your "nothing you can

This wasn't about legal justification, I merely pointed out that you can be responsible about it. Example...I don't say AUDIO at 1kw. I don't cuss. I don't keydown and lock the channel. I don't cause problems on my neighbors TV by using a filter. You missed the spirit of my post by a country mile.
The original post I responded to claimed amp owners were all doing these things, I merely pointed out that not all amp owners are keyclowns. You were the one that decided I had some legal justification. I don't. I do feel a moral obligation to make sure my iliegal activity affects nobady but me.
When I rushed my grandson to the hospital it was not a legal justification, it was a moral justification. You only see things in black and white and read more into my post that what I type.

Let's see....call 911 then they radio EMS who then gets in ambulance at hospital and drives to my house OR grab kid, jump in car and go. Your right Frank, your way is much faster....NOT I risked only the lives of me and my grandson by driving 10 mph over the limit on a county road withh little traffic. The road was designed for 70mph back in the 60s, it now has a 55mph limit, I drove 65mph. But on this issue
I could care less what you think, this was my grandson and I would do it again. You sit and wait if you want, I choose to act.

Moraly justify the speeding? Yes I did. I did not use a medical emergancy to justify amps. Again you read that in your own mind. I will state again that I used my amp to get assistance when my vehicle was stuck and I feel moraly justified. I also use it sometimes on the freebands to shoot DX, I did not try to justify that, I merely pointed out that I did so without cussing, causing interference, jamming the channel, ect.....

I have a list. I guess we have differant definitions of what a mud-duck is. Unless you are talking about overseas mud-ducks with whom I shoot skip. I certainly don't consider government radio users mud-ducks.

Sure it does, hardly anyone in my area uses 1750m. Channel 10 always has

Who cares about global economics when the jobs are taken from here? If the trend continues, who will buy the products produced?

Hey, I have an idea, let's never raise the minimum wage scale above the poverty level, and then let the American people support the employees who work at these establishments with section 8 housing. That way, American citizens can support corporations with their tax dollars whether they like it or not. That should really help the economy!

Oh wait, nevermind. We already do that.

Doug, why don't you leave the keyboard and go listen to Sean Hannity a bit more. Matter of fact, submit your resume. Maybe he'll give you job as "Keyclown Hunter and Bush Supporter Extraordinaire".

But, I do sincerely hope the children you fathered and then chose to become a deadbeat dad to don't have to die for this madman.

The ABS-1600 should be close to a dipole in gain and probably a tiny bit more. I need a "green" antenna that can be disassembled and stored for transport, the 1600 is perfect for my needs.

Dave:

Of course I understand that reasoning. I don't think the function of the star was to act as ground radials at all, but to increase the coupling to RF ground. I had a mag mount Wilson 1000 on the roof of the cab of a '94 Ranger pickup. It did well. I added the star, it did much better.

Forgive me if I'm rambling a bit. I just got back from surgery and am flying a bit high on Vicodin. Just had my gallbladder out this morning. They used a scope to do it. Pretty cool. I have pictures.

You can probably get away with low sampling rates if you bandwidth limit the hi frequency end to cut off at 4 Khz, and that way you can use 8khz as the sampling rate (Niequest theorem 2x audio rate).

16bps is also satisfactory as a bit rate with these low fidelity audio chips.

That's what I do with my voice grade recordings. It reduces file size (and streaming bandwidth) considerably.

Reagan proved that trickle down not only worked, it resulted in a period of economic growth which was unprecedented in our time.

As to outsourcing being good for the U.S. economy, consider this:

A company which relocated lower skilled manufacturing jobs overseas now can hire more administrative and support people. Typically, in this business model, the "brains" of the business is here, while the "brawn" of the operation takes place in places where the standard of living in line with the skill level of the job.

If you start to penalize those corporations which utilize outsourcing, at some point the it might also make economic sense to relocate their corporate offices offshore as well to avoid tax penalties. Do you want that?

The bottom line is that when the automobile replaced the horse and buggy, there were a lot of blacksmiths who suddenly found themselves no longer in demand. We adjusted and moved on. We, as Americans, need to just accept that this country is no longer economically attractive as a place of manufacture for most consumer goods, which can be made cheaper elsewhere. We need to look at other careers which are less susceptible to "relocation".

Or that they were MOVED sometime in the 12 years since the end of the Concluding that they were never there is based on an assumption, not on fact.

Either way, it still doesn't prove that Bush LIED about it. The worst you can say is that he responded to faulty intelligence. Intelligence that several other countries concurred with along with several prominent democrats including one Senator Kerry. That is all a matter of record.

Yes, the campaign handlers used it as a political stunt, but it was not a lie in any form.

I was first made aware of this when the story broke and the NEWS MEDIA made the claim that Lynch had "fought bravely". That was the accepted story at the time. It was later found out that this was not the case.

Bush read a statement which was prepared for him, to honor a soldier based on the same information that was released to the public through the embedded news people.

Why is it incorrect? The fed does raise rates to cool an economy that grows too fast in order to stop the growth of inflation. Yes, the Fed raised rates once. They can do it again many more times. While the base rate by which mortgages are written against are not directly tied to the Fed rates (They tend to follow the 10 year bond rate) it does have an influence.

Once again, prove the lie. What lie? By every economic indicator that has any credibility, our economy has been steadily growing, despite the volatility of the oil market. Unemployment is slightly over 5%, which, by all accounts is really not that bad.

>The dollar is at a fifteen year low again

Bush was not directly responsible for any of those losses. You can not point to one economic policy or plan that he penned that can be tied to it. The worst you can say is that Bush was a victim of circumstances, not the orchestrator of them.

> He called this "adding jobs" and "job improvement".

Wake up! In this global economy, this is the way it's going to be until the standard of living equalizes in the rest of the world.

That depends on your point of reference. He did turn around a recession, and we have been growing since. We are currently going in the right direction. It might not be fast enough for some of you. But then things like 9/11, the growing threat of terrorism, and the volatile oil market tend to slow things like economic growth.

I predict gains in the medical, financial, recreation, and tech markets. These are areas where the U.S. still leads.

The deficit is meaningless. It's just a number on paper. Us common folks have never been influenced by deficits before, so why should we now?

Right on! I never supported Kerry, but maintained he was the ONLY chance of unseating Bush. I have been an Independent for many years and before that, a registered republican.
  Hell with it,,it's over,,all we can do is hope for the best.
Here's hoping that Dr. X gets that broadcast thing up and rolling again.

No, I mean that there is no proof that that banner was anything more than a backdrop in a celebration turned political for the return of a ship after their mission in Iraq.

True, and related. But not exclusive.

The initial air targeting of strategically significant targets.

Indirect. Not a result of any policy of an administration. Rather it is a perception driven by propaganda delivered by whichever side is looking to make a statement. I could further expound that the constant bombardment of "bad" economic news by the left wing controlled news media was done to deliberately hold down the recovery so as to score political points for the democrats. Certain members of the democratic party are on record saying the worse the economy does, the better for us.

But these indirect effects are usually not the result of any direct action, and they are short lived. As far as wall street is concerned, they reacted more favorably to Bush than Kerry, as evidenced by substantial short gains shortly after the election. This will level off, as reality re-asserts itself, and the true market conditions regain control.

Cmdr. Conrad Chun, a Navy spokesman, defended the president's assertion.

"The banner was a Navy idea, the ship's idea," Chun said.

"The banner signified the successful completion of the ship's deployment," he said, noting the Abraham Lincoln was deployed 290 days, longer than any other nuclear-powered aircraft carrier in history.

At the time of the event, Democrats worried President Bush would use his speech and the dramatic landing for political gain.

On Tuesday, Democratic presidential candidates, hoping to make it a political liability for Bush, accused him of trying to shift blame for the stagecraft to the Navy.

"Landing on an aircraft carrier and saying 'mission accomplished' didn't end a war, and standing in the Rose Garden and stating that 'Iraq is a dangerous place' does nothing to make American troops safer," Sen. John Kerry of Massachusetts said in a written statement Tuesday.

Former Vermont Gov. Howard Dean also issued a critical statement.

"Today, we heard him try to walk away from the USS Abraham Lincoln 'end of major combat operations' announcement, absurdly claiming that the White House was not responsible for the 'Mission Accomplished' banner that decorated the flight deck," Dean said."

Hey, my 30 year old home that I had in the Bay Area was purchased in 1992 for only $165.000. Sold it in 1999 for $365.000 and moved only a couple of hundred miles and paid $235.000 for only a home that was a few years old, more than twice the size. The market out there was already declining in 1998, that's why I got out of there when I did, but the market where I'm at now is great! The house across the street just sold for $400.000! and it's a single story, smaller by some 950+ sqr feet tahn mine. While checking real estate price where I used to live, the market is still very slow.

Bush is the leader of the country and all responsibility ends with him.

know where they are." This was an official speaking on behalf of the president.

>A far different cry than the accusation that the

The handpicked staff IS an extension of the president.

  The president said the invasion of Iraq was necessary to "stop the proliferation or transfer" of wmds by Iraq. And before you ask for "proof", yes, I can cite you quotes and dates and even admittances of the Bush administration that they set forth these and many other direct-contradictions of themselves.

>Then by all means feel free to provide them.

A separate post.

Since the wmds were not found, that means they were never there, or the Bush admin FAILED in their objective,,,,,stopping their transfer or proliferation.

>Or that they were MOVED sometime in the 12

If true, it solidly satisfies the Bush lie via Rumsfeld saying "WE" knew where they were in Iraq in 2002.

If true, it solidly satisfies the validity of them failing to prevent their "transfer"

>Concluding that they were never there is

No one said they were NEVER there. Bush (via Rumsfeld said they KNEW where they (wmds) were in 2002 and again in 2003.

>Either way, it still doesn't prove that Bush

>LIED about it. The worst you can say is that

That's abdicating personal responsibility, something you always claimed you were for. Assuming it was failed intel (yet, again), who do you feel should be held accountable and how?

> Intelligence that several other countries

>concurred with along with several prominent >democrats including one Senator Kerry. That

Yes, they believed the president. It was not their failed intel, it was the president's. And it was failed Intel all the way since day one.

You already acknowledged the public screwing Bush put to Jessica Lynch with his lies.

>What lies? Prove it! I want to see proof, by a

>verifiable source that Bush LIED about Lynch

With all due respect, Dave, you're not up to date on the party you blindly defend at all cost.

>elephants under the table that aren't really

And you don't hear things when they are being spoken by the candidates or the president, even when you claim you were watching.
This proves it.

You're not even aware of the statements the Bush administration issued concerning the banner.

>accomplished banner. That banner was >placed there to celebrate the return of the ship >from duty. Yes, the campaign handlers used it >form.

Sure it was. Here again, you illustrate you were not aware of the statement Bush made to the press concerning the origins of the banner. He claimed the Navy placed it there when he knew his scout staff placed it there.

 Heck, you have shown you weren't even aware what was discussed in the debates, let alone paying attention when Bush told the entire country on live TV how Jessica "fought valiantly until the end, mortally wounding several terrorists before being captured."

>I was first made aware of this when the story

>broke and the NEWS MEDIA made the claim

>that Lynch had "fought bravely".

Yes,,,that was Murdoch's station.

>That was the

>accepted story at the time.

Not by those who were aware of the real story, which was NOT difficult to get. Many papers ran the truth. Bush chose to speak about Lynch in his address to the nation right after her capture and without ascertaining any Intel at all, told the nation those lies about her. He also awarded her the Purple Heart, which was an insult to all those who EARNED and received one prior to that. If you know what a Purple Heart is awarded for, you know one doesn't receive one solely for being captured. She earned some decorations, but the Purple Heart isn't one of them.The mere act of Bush awarding this specific decor clearly illustrates his deliberate intention of trying to make his lies about Jessica appear valid.

>It was later found >out that this was not the case.

No,,it was known since day one by everyone other than FOX.

>Bush read a statement which was prepared

>for him,

By the staff he picked,,this is the miltary. Use the Captain of the ship analogy. If the ship hits a shoal, it doesn't matter if the Captain was in the galley getting his jollies on, sleeping, on deck, or at the helm. He is ultimately responsible, no one else. Again, you are abdicating the responsibility of the president.

> to honor a soldier based on the same

>information that was released to the public

You do realize your contradiction here, do you not? You claimed it was failed military intel, then you claim it was the media, now you claim the president based HIS intel ON the media.

You
want proof of something only you seem to have missed, but I am perfectly content on watching you tell the masses, once again, what they saw with their own eyes and heard with their own ears somehow did not take place.

>You read things into events and twist

>meanings from things that just didn't happen.

Oh, it happened, Dave. Once again, you claimed it didn't, then turned around and illustrated it did happen by blaming the president's words on incorrect information supplied via the media (FOX).

I was never a demo or a Kerry fan. I was registered repub and was very involved during the college years. I deserted the GOP when Reagan stained it (second term) beyond what it has since been capable of repair. I take solace in the notion GW gets to clean up his own mess and can't run again. Trust me on this economic thing,,,,,there will be record mortgage foreclosures in this term of Herr Bush. During the time of low interest rates when folks should have been eliminating debt, the majority increased their debt with bigger and more expensive homes and loans and second homes, etc. The real estate bubble was the only thing temporarily holding up this economy for the last few years. That's about to come to a shocking, realizing halt for many of those who took out ARM's opposed to straight fixed conventionals. Are you smiling at the pump? I know I am.,,,,does it matter at all if we get to $5.00 a gallon..you know, because as the Bush tax code allows, folks like you and I get it free as a business expense. It's everyone else who suffers.

>I don't get anything free,
It was directed to Mopar as a fellow business owner.

Bush gave it to me and anyone else who owns businesses. In fact, thanks to Bush, I can purchase a Hummer and have you (as a taxpayer) pay for it for MY business. This was meant as an exemption for farm vehicles and goes by gross weight of the vehicle, but the Bush admin refused to close this loophole, as it permits the purchase of gas guzzling engines that consume even more petroleum. This is the reason you see many real estate agents and other small-to-medium self-employed individuals driving hummers,,,,not because they are doing exceptionally well financially, but because thanks to the Bush admin, they now have a way for YOU to pay for their new gas-sucker. This is bullshit.

You said nothing of the speed of the economic growth until now. You clearly made the incorrect assumption that the feds will seek to stem a growing economy, which is not only incorrect, but patently false. The feds are interested in growing the economy, not stunting it's growth when it begins to grow.

Only the RE market isn't the only loss from which you have to select, it is merely the LAST one you have to select since it was the only thing propping up this farce of economic improvement heralded by the lying Bush administration.

>Once again, prove the lie. What lie?

An entire post will be forthcoming paying attributes to this man, as soon as I get some morefree time.

>By every >economic indicator that has any credibility, our

Only by what you view as "credibility'. Again, the majority of economists predict a bad moon rising and the Bush admin is the only entity that is unable to comprehend this reckless spending on a needless war is creating a financial hole and deficit so large that the coming fallout of it is absolutely inevitable. The amazing part of it is, those of you who are unable to see the forest for the trees and are heralding falsely of how great the economy is at the present, will be the first ones to complain when the economy comes crashing down because of this deficit, only y'all will be blaming the "libs", never mind the deficit, never mind the house and senate is controlled by the right,,,,somehow,
it will all be the "libs" fault again.

>Unemployment is at 5% which by

>all accounts is really not that bad.

By the revamped Bush math only.
One in three is unemployed in Ohio.

The dollar is at a fifteen year low again

>That is due primarily to the widening trade

>deficit.

No. it is due to the mounting deficit PERIOD, the majority which is the direct fault of Iraq, not any trade deficit. The trade deficit is paltry when compared to the cost of the war in Iraq to the US adding to our deficit.

> We are importing more than we export.

They
completely rewrote the way debt is calculated since they didn't like the answers they received under the formula that had always been in place.
Need proof of that, too?
Such manipulations of the stats and numbers equate fuzzy math. Bush lost 300,000 well paying jobs (above 30 G) in his first QUARTER as president and ultimately ended up adding half a million McJobs,, paying substandard wages.

>Bush was not directly responsible for any of >those losses. You can not point to one

>economic policy or plan that he penned that >can be tied to it.

Sure I can. I can point ot several examples. There were stops on his campaign trail (for his first term) where he promised fiscal aid to certain entities. By not following through on several of these promises (lies), many jobs were directly lost.

> The worst you can say is that Bush was a >victim of circumstances, not the orchestrator

>of them.

If this was true, the position of president would no longer be needed or valid, as it would be of figurehead status only. Somehoe, I don't believe YOU believe what you said, as you do not apply these principles to the opposite party.

He called this "adding jobs" and "job improvement".

>Wake up! In this global economy, this is the >way it's going to be until the standard of living

>equalizes in the rest of the world.

LOL,,,not in your lifetime. And mucking with the numbers is not how it's going to be....this will end the moment Bush leaves office. here's another prediction it doesn't take a rcket scientist to offer: The Bush favorability rating will be at it's lowest this term.

Need proof of that, too? Under Bush, the economic leading index fell 3 points under his first half of term, then rebounded almost a full point and a half almost 8 months later. Bush called this "improving the economy" and said it was because of his tax cuts. Getting the economy to not even where it was when he took office is NOT improving the economy.

>That depends on your point of reference.

The point of reference was....the economy took a dive under Bush,,everyone agrees, even these non-named "economists you invoked. A majority agree it (the economy) rebounded to a certain extent,,,how much it rebounded is contested, but the consensus is that it has NOT rebounded to pre-911 status.

>He did turn around a recession, and we have >been growing since.

Please point to an act of legislation by Bush that you claim turned around the recession...remember, this is a recession that you, at the time, claimed did not exist.

> We are currently going in the right direction. It >might not be fast enough for some of you.

Bush is the one that promised a "swift" campaign of "shock and awe". It was anything but swift, and even the arm chair generals knew "swift" was bullshit from day one.

>But then things like 9/11, the growing threat of >terrorism, and the volatile oil market tend to >slow things like economic growth.

Yes,,,,after 911, Bush failed to protect us, as we were hit again in Florida with Anthrax. What did Bush do there? Why, he dropped the ball, of course. Have you any clue the number of illegals pouring across the borders each day? How can this be when Bush told us the borders are secure? How about the terrorists that held up that school in Russia? Are you aware of the reports that have some of them in the US, entering through Mexico into Arizona, disguised as illegal Mexican Immigrants? Please explain how this can possibly be when we are "moving in the right direction" and Bush tells us our borders are "secure"? At the port of Tampa, there is NO guard, no cops, no military. How can this be when Bush told us he is doing everything he can to secure our ports. He has done absolutely NOTHING, except throw money at the war and to red tape agencies, whcih, not too long ago, you claimed that "tossing money" to them isn't the answer.

Besides,,,,,,,,,,,,
Those would have to be some pretty heavy and main-stream "areas" that affect the majority of the US populace to makeup for the incredible massive record setting deficit Bush has the country owing. What areas are you predicting will rebound so strongly as to set incredible growth and earnings records in this term (which would have to take place to offset

>I predict gains in the medical, financial,

>recreation, and tech markets. These are areas
>where the U.S. still leads.

This may come as a surprise to you, but there will always be gains in the those markets in some fashion. You claimed areas will "rebound" to offset the national debt. In order for something to rebound, it must be repressed in some fashion, and the generic markets you mention have historically experienced growth.
I ask again, more specifically, what do you see rebounding and growing at such a substantial rate that it is capable of eliminating this deficit and by what reference do you base your opinion?

>The deficit is meaningless. It's just a number

>on paper.

The deficit is a bill,,a bill that must be paid. To say it means nothing clearly indicates your knowledge of such.

> Us common folks have never been >influenced by deficits before, so why should

>we now?

The blue collar worker, middle and lower class are those influenced MOST by mounting deficits and is reflected in consumer confidence (spending) and cosumerism in general when recessions hit. It isn't the wealthy cutting back on their lifestyle, it's the regular Joes.

Now you are going to play the semantics game. The "mission" is what the particular ship was doing when it was taking part in the overall campaign in Iraq. The "mission" from the perspective of the ship in question, is the part that that particular ship played in the bigger picture. That was stated as much by administration officials.

It's still not the same thing. For that matter what proof do you have that Rumsfeld lied as well? There's a big difference between acting on faulty intelligence, and deliberately fabricating an untruth.

You cannot prove the latter over the former. You can only suspect and

The intelligence we had at the time convinced us that we did know where they were in 2002. Either: A) the weapons were moved between that time and the beginning of the war. Or B) they were never there, and the intel was faulty. Or C) the whole thing was a deliberate lie.

Why do you choose to believe "C" when there is no hard evidence that discounts either "A" or "B"?

The president didn't gather the intel, that was the job of the CIA, and the intel agencies of our allies. The same exact intel was given to the congress as was given to the president. When the intel was examined, the congress came to roughly the same conclusion as the president. You don't think for a minute that the congress would accept "sanitized" intel straight from the white house do you? You can't be that naive.

for the Purple heart. Especially when you compare the severity of her

The economy IS growing. Only the most myopic and biased partisan will deny it. The fed HAS already raised rates once, and are poised to do it again. So tell me again now "false" and "incorrect" I am.

When it begins to grow is already history. It's been growing now for over 2 years. The rate of growth has been taking a sharper rise as of late which prompted the fed to look into rate hikes.

The bond rate is set by the market. When people buy into the bond market in large quantities, the bond rate falls. When people sell out of the bond market, the rate rises. The bond market usually mirrors the stock market. When people get into the stock market, they usually get out of the bond market, and vice versa. The stock market has been enjoying a rebound during the last week or so. So the bond market will start to lose ground and the rate will rise.

How does his prediction for the war relate to the economy? You're shifting gears again.

And lest you forget, Bush also stated that the war against terror would not be easy, or quick. He even postulated that this war might be with us for the rest of our adult lives.

You don't want a president, you want Superman. All you can do is throw rocks. Let me give you a clue. NOTHING we can do now or in the near future will totally protect us against ALL possible attacks. The best we can do is limit terrorist's options. Since we have not had a terrorist attack since 9/11, shows that our extra security is having some effect. The fact that Al-Qaeda is disrupted, disorganized, and on the run, doesn't allow much in the way of time and resources to plan those "big" attacks.

No Doug, it's just that most of your drivel is meaningless, and frankly, coming from you...well, you just don't warrant my time. Now, go crawl back into your delusion that you have power over something/anything.

No, a license is not required for the MURS service. It is a license-free service like FRS.

2946. chosing cb radio - help wanted

HELP. HELP. HElp

I am dazed and confused.

Couple days ago I decide to change my actual mobile CB (wchich is very simple one) to something beter.

So I have started searching. First in my country (Poland), but the choice here is very poor and prices are extremely high, so I decided to import one from US (that is very funny- bringing radio from US is much cheaper than buying that anywhere in Europe :-).

But then huge problem appeared - which one cb radio should I chose ???!

At the beging I had some favorites, but after next few days I expanded my list. Right now I realy dont know which one should I chose.

I have quite nice list:

Connex 4800 (app.price 299$)
Galaxy 959 (app.price 156$)
Magnum 59 (app.price 329$)
Mirage 99 (app.price 255$)
Mirage 98 (app.price 225$)
TR 696 FD1 (app.price 169$)
voyage vr 9000 (app.price 209$)
Magnum Delta Force (app.price 229$)
Magnum S9 (app.price 329$)
galaxy 99 (app.price 339$)

Of course I prefer to spend rather less money than more :-), but I am so desperated, than I put on my list also some more expensive radios. Generally speaking I need radio for use mainly in a car, I need radio - regular AM, but also SSB (I dont need this now, but I rather want to have it for future), frequency counter and maybe some new, fancy noise reduction systems and maybe also tools like clarifier or delta tune (or similiar), presence of talkback and echo could make that radio great.

PLEASE HELP ME - which one should I chose ????

Or maybe you can sugest any other suitable for me ?

and mayby you can give my adress of i-net shops in USA with reasonable prices (frankly speaking I have few adresses of such a shops and all prices are much, much better comparing to european shops, but, still, maybe there is a one better than these one I found)

thanx in advance
Rafal

Apparently not intensely enough to hear Kerry speaking the same words

It's misleading to make statements based on your own assumptions about Kerry's plans when those plans were laid out in detail on his website, and they were in stark contradiction to your assumptions.

There is -NO- candidate that can provide any guarantee about anything except for being able to occupy the White House at our expense. They express their intentions, but that's -all- they can do. The power of the president is limited by Congress and the Supreme Court -- if they don't agree with a plan made by the president the plan fails. The -real- question is if the president can get bipartisan support for his plans. Kerry had a very good chance of getting bipartisan support, since he has done well doing so with much of his legislation in Congress. Bush clearly can't and for good reasons -- he pisses off too many people with his mudslinging and broken promises.

> And a cornerstone of his campaign >(Once he decided which side of the Iraq issue he was going to stick >with),

Let's clear up something here: Kerry was not alone in supporting the war in Iraq when presented with the Pentagon's "evidence" of Saddam's threat. And despite his support, he -did- express his reservations, saying that war should be undertaken ONLY as a last resort AND only when all other methods had failed. Bush gave his assurances that he would do just that. Later, it was clear that the "evidence" was not just inaccurate but downright bogus. It was also clear that not all diplomatic efforts had been exhausted. Kerry changed his position BECAUSE THE SITUATION HAD CHANGED -- Bush did -not- adhere to his promise to use war as a last resort!

Kerry's values have always been consistent and his fundamental policies have never changed. That's a fact, and it's more true about Kerry than the vast majority of Congress. His alleged "flip-flop" was nothing more than an buzzword used by the Bush campaign in order to simplify Kerry's change of position WHICH WAS PRECIPITATED by Bush's failed promises and the Pentagon's piss-poor intelligence.

> was to blame Bush for allowing companies to take advantage of

I didn't see that as the "cornerstone" of his campaign at all. I saw the major issues as the war in Iraq, the economy, and defending the constitution against attacks by those who want to repeal the first amendment (specifically, seperation of church and state). He made strong arguments on all these issues.

In many cases it is. For example, the manufacture of chemical weapons necessarily leaves behind trace evidence. When Pentagon "intelligence" makes assertions that chemical weapons are being manufactured at locations X, Y and Z, but we get there and there is no trace evidence, the only conclusion is that the "intelligence" was wrong. The fact is that ALL the intelligence was wrong regarding WMDs. I could buy your argument if they had found recent evidence of weapons manufacture or storage, or even the facilities and/or supplies needed to support such activities. But the FACT is they found NOTHING except remnants of weapons from before the first war.

> I say
>they moved to Syria.

You can say anything you want. You have that right. But just because you say so doesn't make it a fact. And assuming that there -were- such weapons and that they -were- moved, it's far more likely that they would have been moved to Jordan, not Syria.

> As long as this remains a possibility, you can't >conclude otherwise, without reasonable doubt.

Reasonable doubt is not fact. The fact is that there were no WMDs. You can make assumptions and speculations, but without facts they have no more weight than any of the assumptions and speculations you claim were made by the Kerry campaign. You can't have it both ways.....hmmm, haven't I said that before?

Undisputed fact, occasionally addressed by numerous sources. Bush #1 gave him the bugs because he wanted them, and because the US supported Saddam in the Iran-Iraq war (Saddam was losing and the US covertly wanted a stalemate). Biological samples were also provided by France and Germany who, at the time, supported the covert US policy in the region.

>>- Halliburton won a no-bid contract for reconstruction costs;

Wrong. There are numerous companies well qualified to handle the reconstruction of Iraq. It was those companies that first raised the curtain on the Halliburton contract, and are responsible for the complaints made to the DOJ leading to the current investigation.

One source is that White House advisor (I forget his name) who was fired for his disagreements with Bush policies. He wrote a book that sparked plenty of controversy but no denials from Bush. He was then called to testify before the 9/11 commission, where he provided the fact I stated above. Another source is Dr. Rice's testimony from the 9/11 commission. There are many other sources, and the fact has never been disputed by either party.

>>- The bidding process for a Pentagon contract does not require more

A valid conclusion based on an inductive argument premised by the countless number of instances where contracts had been awarded through the bidding process, and where that process took far less than a year.

>>- Cheney was CEO of Halliburton before he became VP;
>And I was the Duke of Earl. Meaningless.

Far from it. Cheney still holds interests and receives benefits from the company. It's a conflict of interest and it's illegal. The only reason the full extent of his involvement with the company has not been disclosed (not even to the DOJ) is because Bush and Cheney are invoking 'executive privilege', thereby preventing the disclose.

If you want a who's-who in the Bush-boys network, check out this site:

And don't consider that a source: Take the names and associations on that page and dig for your own facts from other sources. But I doubt you will find much contradiction.

Geez, Dave, you said you had all the facts already. I guess you don't.
Do I have to do -all- your work for you? Try the DOJ site and search for the complaint.

>>- Halliburton is under investigation by the DOJ for overcharging the That's not the limit of the investigation. The DOJ is also looking at the fact that Halliburton has been doing business with US enemies under phoney foreign subsidiaries, and that they continue to do business with Iran in that method. There are other reasons. Go read the complaint. If you can't find it, run back here and tell me so I can do your footwork for you.

>>- DOJ and Pentagon policy is to freeze a contract pending the results

Hardly. There are plenty of other companies fully qualified to start work right away without missing a beat. I would bet that that they are ready to do just that and are waiting for a ruling from the DOJ.

>>- Rumsfeld refuses to freeze the Halliburton contract;
>For obvious reasons.

I agree, the reasons are obvious. But the reasons -you- think are obvious are not the same reasons the Halliburton contract has not been frozen. And the reasons are, at this point, conjecture, not fact.

>>- The damage to the infrastructure in Iraq was 10 times worse than the

It was in a press conference by Rumsfeld shortly after the war "ended". He was bragging about the damage he had caused. Again, if you can't find it yourself (which would suprise me since you claim to be so good at digging up the facts) then tell me and I'll find it for you.

>>- Resistance to the invasion was significantly less than the first war

>But we had no way of knowing that before we went in.

Wrong. The US had enforced a military no-fly zone over two-thirds of the country for 10 years before the war, and you can bet that every inch of Iraq had been photographed. Iraq had no capability to shoot down US spy satellites. The EM surveillance capabilities of the US is unsurpassed. There were also US operatives on the ground in Iraq, as admitted by the CIA. The military strength of Iraq -must- have been known well in advance of the invasion (and for the same reason it's impossible for me to believe that the Pentagon thought there were WMDs when there was absolutely NO evidence to support the claim -- on the contrary, the decision to justify the invasion was based upon speculation; when Bush was faced with an absense of proof of WMDs in Iraq he asked his top intelligence official about the 'likelyhood' of such weapons. He was told that not only were WMDs -likely- in Iraq, but that it was a "slam dunk").

Because only in hindsight can we see the facts with objectivity; When Powell pushed his "evidence" before the UN we trusted him that his "evidence" was accurate; it was not. We can now see that it was mostly circumstantial bullshit that was carefully chosen and assembled into a picture that would garner international support for Bush's war. It failed miserably, but the US public took the bait, hook, line and sinker. And that was the minimum Bush needed, since he has already suggested he would ignore the UN if they didn't buy his sales pitch. The US rallied behind his war-cry that the UN was impotent, and Bush went forward with his unilateral "War on Terror" (a euphamism for his war on Iraq, but the fact is that people didn't fear Iraq -- they fear terrorists, so now the war in Iraq is considered part of the war on terror, and Iraqi resistance fighters are, not suprisingly, called 'terrorists').

Get a clue, Dave.

Again, Frontline covered the fact in their piece, "Rumsfeld's War". But MacGregor (as well as other Pentagon generals who Rumsfelf fired) was interviewed on C-Span shortly before the Frontline piece and pretty much verified everything.

>soldier's lives. You should know better.

I do, and I know it from first-hand experience: Mechanized warfare can get you -into- a hostile area, but only troops can secure both the land and the people. If you don't have enough troops to maintain the peace then you end up sending them into a shooting gallery. That's exactly what's happening in Iraq. And that's exactly what Kerry feared when he publically stated his reservations before he signed the legislation that put us in the first Iraq war. And that's exactly what Kerry feared when he publically stated his reservations before he signed the legislation that put us in the -second- Iraq war.

If you have overwhelming troops (which is -not- the same as having ovewhelming force) then the casualty count will be low. That is a basic and fundamental fact of war that the Pentagon generals tried desperately to teach Rumsfeld. But Rumsfeld ignored these rules (which were learned from previous wars) and fired the generals.

>>- Rumsfeld fired the Pentagon generals and advisors who recommended

>But do you know all the inside details surrounding the reasons why?
>No, of course not. You'd rather just make more unfounded conjectures.

The reasons were made clear by both the generals and by Rumsfeld. The generals (the most prominent of which was Gen. Shinseki, Army Chief of Staff) publically dissed Rumsfeld -before- the war by saying his plan wouldn't work, and again -after- the war by saying "I told you so".
They told Rumsfeld that he was wrong. They were right. Rumsfeld fired them. Those are the facts. You like to cite Occam's Razor? Now would be a good time.

Don't confuse the facts with your own speculations. Nothing I stated was a conclusion. They were all facts -- verifiable and undisputed.
Feel free to check each and every one at your own leisure. But don't tell me anything different because you will just be proving that you

Ok, so you have an excuse for every point except one: there are places that an amped CB won't get out. But I don't suppose you go to those places, do you?

You -did- say that you justify the amp for the possibility of an emergency. Doesn't matter, the point applies to the legal 40 as well as the freeband, amp or not -- there is no direct contact with emergency services. CB requires that someone is actually listening, is willing to help (and not planning to take advantage of an emergency situation), and has the means to relay your comm or directly contact emergency services. You can't deny the fact that it's much easier and better to directly contact the emergency services yourself.

You knock skip and ignore the other possibilities. Sat comm is, without a doubt, the best method of radio communication as far as coverage is concerned.

>Contrary to your delusion, I was a good student. No I did not pass notes.

My reference was to a game that's played by the class: Everyone sits in a circle and one person is given a message. He passes that message to the next person by whispering it in his ear. The message is passed around the circle in the same manner. When it finally gets back to the original person, the message is usually so distorted that it has nothing at all to do with the original message (and sometimes it doesn't make any sense at all!). You never did that? Anyway, that's the problem with bucket-brigade communication.

You stated that, where there is no cell-phone coverage, you need an amp to get out. You also stated that there was too much noise to run legal power. So my question was where all this noise is coming from.
If it isn't a radio dead-zone then that would explain the QRM. But what you -haven't- explained is why such a remote location has all that noise. After all, if there are that many people in the area there is bound to be cell-phone coverage, too. The only way you can be in a cell-phone coverage area and not have service is if you are in a radio dead-zone. And if that's the case, you shouldn't be getting all this QRM. IOW, you are making excuses using improbable situations.

Maybe it would help if you described this "location" a bit better.
Like, what part of the country are you talking about? And why is it so difficult to hike up the hill to get LOS to a cell tower?

So you freeband for the fun and challenge of it? You think that you can't be challenged working DX on the ham bands? Or that it can't be fun? And isn't it -more- of a challenge to work DX on the legal 40?
With legal power? After all, that was your reason for working the freeband, right? Or is that -too- much of a challenge? Damn, dude, you flip-flop almost as much as Bush claimed Kerry flip-flopped!

Now if you are looking for a -real- challenge, try the LOWFER band.

And you are wrong. You can choose to -believe- that you are right but intentionally breaking the law is still irresponsible. In fact, that's pretty much the definition of lawbreaking. So unless you can provide a legal justification for breaking the law, this conversation is over.

Good deals to be found! My friend & his family just bought an

Now in most parts of the country that fricken expensive, but in the

No, I don't care if illegal equipment is sold or not. My original post was to point out that amps don't cause people to act as fools on CB, fools are fools regardless of the equipment. I don't own an export radio and could care less about them. I prefer my old Cobra 148 to any export on the market today.

Never said that, there are places that I can't get out even with an amp. At this point I walk until I get cell service or thumb a ride.

There is usually someone on channel 10 that I can raise, but it's not always a given. I prefer to use my cell, if not possible then the CB is my next choice. Yes it is easier to contact emergency services in some cases, in other cases it is not. Each situation is differant. It's not a perfect world.

I have never explored the possibility of a satt phone before. I know that owning them is expensive. I was unaware that you could rent one for a weekend. I will have to check local availability on that one.

I meant noise on their end, the people in town. I can hear fine, but when you have a dozen locals talking and I'm 10 miles out they can not hear me sometimes on channel 9 or 10 due to noise level or bleed over .

Cell service is spotty around here, they are still adding towers. Hopefully this won't be a problem in the future. Let me also add that when I bought my house 8 years ago SBC tried to deny me a private line and wanted to stick me with a 4 party line with limited calling. At this time I cannot get DSL and it looks as if it may be a long time before I do.

I wouldn't go quite that far, they are certainly biased in their reporting.
Fox seems to be the only TV news source that doesn't lean heavily to the left. I prefer the fair and balanced approach of Fox news.

Let's see now.... they have Bill O'Reilly who says that anyone who criticizes the US is unamerican; they hired Oliver North and Mark Fuhrman as consultants; all of their anchors are 'pretty' people except for their token Democrat Alan Colmes; almost all the women wear short skirts with high boots; and it seems only the men are allowed to voice their opinions (if the women -do- voice an opinion it's usually in support of the man in the other chair). You might as well take a group of hard-line Amish people, give them a 21st century makeover, and put them in front of the camera to yap about morals and values.
And for a 'news' channel they sure don't provide much news -- mostly a lot of opinionated hype interrupted by the occasional 30-second interview with another 'news' person who gives more opinionionated hype.

"Fair and Balanced"? What a crock. They should be sued for false advertising. Their only redeeming quality is Shepard Smith who, despite his on-the-air meltdown a few years ago during a wave of mideast violence, is probably one of the most "fair and balanced" people in the business. I'm suprised they haven't fired him.

NAFTA was a boon to all the southern states that employ immigrants in positions Americans simply will not perform. NAFTA was a necessity in the tourist areas of the south and the agricultural arena. It was responsible for much business growth in the south.
FWIW, what is now reflected and agreed upon as a "recession", was denied

Yeah, it was subtle but noteworthy. It happened during a rash of Israeli counter-attacks against Arafat. Maybe you remember the vid where a copter hovered in broad daylight, fired a few missles and shot holes in the roof of a building for about half an hour..... Anyway, I think his meltdown started when he got an email from some ignorant fool asking, "Where do these Palestinian people come from? Don't they have their own country? Where was Arafat born?". About every five minutes for the next couple hours Shep would hang his head and mutter things like, "I don't know", "this is stupid", and my personal favorite, "What's the truth here".

It's an unwritten taboo for the media to express anything close to the concept that Israel is considered by many to be occupied-Palestine.
But in order to be "fair and balanced" you need to cover both sides of any issue. It seemed as if Shep was having a personal conflict about this, like he wanted to tell the -real- story but some corporate or FCC lackey was watching in the booth with his finger on the kill switch. I would like to see him move to an independent news venue and see what kind of job he would do there!

If that were true, why the need to lie about who placed it there?

>Who said anyone lied?

Another incident in which you have no idea what took place. Bush told the media the Navy placed the banner there when his scout advance team placed it there. Again, he admitted this when the Navy complained.

Each mission has a name. YOU claimed this ship was targeted specifically for its successful mission. Going by your claim, it took place in countless missions, but the banner did not say "missions accomplished".
I ask you once more, A) what mission do you claim they were referring and B) please cite your (ahem) proof oof which you based your opinion that the banner referred only to a specific mission by that ship.

>Now you are going to play the semantics >game.

YOU were the one that said the banner was referring to the single ship and mission, not I.
In fact, it is crystal clear to all but those who defend the Bush actions (whether he is right or wrong) he didn't mean the ship when he claimed "major combat was over".

>The "mission" is what the particular ship was >doing when it was taking part in the overall >campaign in Iraq. The "mission" from the >perspective of the ship in question, is the part >that that particular ship played in the bigger >picture.

Huh? No,,that's not correct at all.
This "mission" only you speak of was selectively isolated by yourself , and since all missions have a specific name, I ask the name of the ship's mission that you claim the banner referred to and which Bush referred when he said "major combat has ended" and is "behind us."

> That was stated as much by >administration officials.

Everything the Administration says is wrong, but I would like you to offer up a single quote from the admin separating this ship from the rest of the war with ANY missions of combat AND cite the administration claiming the ship "played a part of the bigger picture." That statement is so obviousl pedestrian that even the Bush admin wouldn't say it like that,,well, perhaps GW would when left to his own devices.
You are falling prey to the same thing you screamed about during election time concerning those who were in the war but did not experience actual combat, yet you seem to give the benefit of doubt when such a scenario arises from the right.
When it all comes out in the wash, folks like you claim "Poor Intel" yet continue to support the same failed intel and incompetence time after time. Poor intel is a sign of a poor administration.

>Dave

>"Sandbagger"

The banner was a goof. Learn to accept the mistakes and move on from them. Some of the Bush folks like yourself are as pious as the president in thinking he makes no error..you oughtta just refer him as your king with such blind devotion that goes against everything the United States and great GOP'ers stand for,,,I remind you of the one who historians unequivocally hold as the greatest GOP'er of all time: Teddy Roosevelt, who righteously said "To stand behind the president right or wrong is not only servile, but moral treason to the American people."

I won't speculate (because I'm usually wrong when I do). What -I-would like to know what this "undisclosed blood disease" was that killed him. Sounds like it may have been the same thing that caused the outbreak of "brain tumors" right after the Iran-Contra scandal.

  The president said the invasion of Iraq was necessary to "stop the proliferation or transfer" of wmds by Iraq. And before you ask for "proof", yes, I can cite you quotes and dates and even admittances of the Bush administration that they set forth these and many other direct-contradictions of themselves.

>Then by all means feel free to provide them.

A separate post.

>Ok....

Since the wmds were not found, that means they were never there, or the Bush admin FAILED in their objective,,,,,stopping their transfer or proliferation.

>Or that they were MOVED sometime in the 12

>years since the end of the Gulf war

If true, it solidly satisfies the Bush lie via Rumsfeld saying "WE" knew
where they were in Iraq in 2002.

>The intelligence we had at the time convinced

>us that we did know where they were in 2002.

A massive endeavor that could not go undetected by satellite and thermal

>Why do you choose to believe "C" when there >is no hard evidence that discounts either "A"

Because I am educated on this matter to the point that I understand what a massive undertaking would have had to take place to merely "move" them. Once again, massive convoys (required) and irregular traffic from the areas where these weapons were alleged to have been (didn't rummy say they were in the North, South, east, west areas of Baghdad, or was that Bush?) could not have gone undetected.

>and when we went in again in 2003.

If true, it solidly satisfies the validity of them failing to prevent their "transfer"

I agree, another bullshit line by Bush. He shouldn't have said that, as you illustratte.

>Concluding that they were never there is >based on an assumption, not on fact.

Same with your conclusion on them being there. But,,,,,,,
No one said they were NEVER there. Bush (via Rumsfeld said they KNEW where they (wmds) were in 2002 and again in 2003.

Not Kerry or Clinton's intel..Bush intel..it's always the Bush intel that is faulty.

That's abdicating personal responsibility, something you always claimed
you were for.

Assuming it was failed intel (yet, again), who do you feel should be held accountable and how?

>The people who's job it is to provide the intel.

Names, please.

>Including several other nations, who were in >full agreement with our intel.

Wrong. The US does not and has not ever went to war based on information providded by a third party (another country). In fact, I believe there exists a standing passage that addresses this item specifically by the military that says any information not gathered by the US that indicates military action on our behalf may be neccessary MUST be affirmed, reaffirmed, and affirmed yet a third time by the US.

> Intelligence that several other countries

Whose Intel, dave? The president's.

>You can't seriously expect anyone to believe >that a liberal democrat(s) would take the word

>of a republican president and go on the record

Happens all the time, Dave.

It was not their failed intel, it was
the president's. And it was failed Intel all the way since day one.

>The president didn't gather the intel,

You fail to understand the manner in whcih the military functions. The country is the president's ship, he is ultimately responsible,,not some other country which you abdicate resposibility from the president.

>that was

>the job of the CIA, and the intel agencies of >our allies.

No Dave. Such sensitive Intel is not farmed out to other countries and it is the job of the president to insure our safety and that safety is derived via domestic owned intel. It is NOT another country's job to be responsible for our well being, safety, security, and intel.

> The same exact intel was given to

I'm not, but you sure are. Google "Pulitzer" and "St. Petersburg Times" and "Bush" for an example of how the Bush family manufactures their wars. They provided MANUFACTURED satellite photos to congress, showing massive troop buildup on the Iraqi border when their were none,,not a single one. The Times won a Pulitzer for breaking this story by purchasing, at great expense, their own satellite photos debunking the Bush lies. No other media covered this story.

>I was first made aware of this when the story

>broke and the NEWS MEDIA made the claim

>that Lynch had "fought bravely".

Yes,,,that was Murdoch's station.

>I didn't know Murdoch owned CNN.....

You are really confused. You claim you watched Bush, but claim he said nothing about her fighting valiantly to the end. THEN you claim you first became aware of it on CNN, on whcih it was never broadcst. Only FOX reported this blunder, in addition to Bush.

>That was the

>accepted story at the time.

Not by those who were aware of the real story, which was NOT difficult to get.

>After a few weeks had gone by.

No,,the next day the NY Post ran a story thoroughly debunking the bush bullshit, and hardattacknews.com had updated coverage at the time.

Many papers ran the truth. Bush chose to speak about Lynch in his address to the nation right after her capture and without ascertaining any Intel at all, told the nation those lies about her.

>So he repeated a bad story?

Yes,,his bad story,

He
also awarded her the Purple Heart, which was an insult to all those who EARNED and received one prior to that. If you know what a Purple Heart is awarded for, you know one doesn't receive one solely for being captured.
She earned some decorations, but the Purple Heart isn't one of them.

>The purple heart is awarded for injuries >sustained in combat.

Which Lynch was not engaged, as we all now know.

> Lynch had several broken bones and other >injuries, which certainly qualifies for the Purple

All this does is qualify you haven't a clue about the Purple Heart.

> Especially when you compare the severity of >her injuries to that sustained by Kerry in >Vietnam.

You failed to mention Bob Dole who received his award for the EXACT SAME circumstances Kerry received his,,,,

>It was later found

>out that this was not the case.

No,,it was known since day one by everyone other than FOX.

>Funny, I didn't see anything different for many >days (It may have been a few weeks, and I >watch CNN exclusively here, since I don't get

>Fox)

Which doesn't surprise me much, as you are a bit in the dark concerning many events. Bush addressed the nation that night.

>Bush read a statement which was prepared

>for him,

By the staff he picked,,this is the miltary. Use the Captain of the ship analogy. If the ship hits a shoal, it doesn't matter if the Captain was in the galley getting his jollies on, sleeping, on deck, or at the helm. He is ultimately responsible, no one else. Again, you are abdicating the responsibility of the president.

>to honor a soldier

Honor her? You mean whore her to the media for his own personal agenda. He didn't "honor" (bestow awards) her until his lies were made public.

>based on the same

>information that was released to the public

>through the embedded news people.

You do realize your contradiction here, do you not? You claimed it was failed military intel, then you claim it was the media, now you claim the president based HIS intel ON the media.

>WRT the Lynch story, yes. Only that story, not >the WMD issue.

You are now claiming Bush based his reports on what the media said and used these media reports as his INTEL when he addressed the nation? Gee Dave,,you really are rocked.

>You read things into events and twist

>meanings from things that just didn't happen.

Oh, it happened, Dave. Once again, you claimed it didn't, then turned around and illustrated it did happen by blaming the president's words on incorrect information supplied via the media (FOX).

>That you assume Fox was behind it is even >more indicative of your bias.

I assumed nothing, I merely gave you the facts of whicih you are void. I claimed FOX was the only station to report this bullshit. Whether they made it up or not is moot. Again, they reported it, they are responsible, and Bush is responsible for telling that bullshit to the nation, not FOX. When a news outlet says something, the source is always considered. When the president says something when addressing the nation concerning such things,, the element of doubt shoud not be there, as he should have his facts straight..something this president has struggled with since day one.

In fact, thanks to Bush, I can purchase a Hummer and have you (as a taxpayer) pay for it for MY business.

>I can do the same thing. All I need is a tax >number....

I mention it only because it's bullshit. It's not right.
This was meant as an exemption for farm vehicles and goes by gross weight of the vehicle, but the Bush admin refused to close this loophole, as it permits the purchase of gas guzzling engines that consume even more petroleum. This is the reason you see many real estate agents and other small-to-medium self-employed individuals driving hummers,,,,not because they are doing exceptionally well financially, but because thanks to the Bush admin, they now have a way for YOU to pay for their new gas-sucker. This is bullshit.

>I'm sure this will be corrected,

In fact, you're SO sure, you are way incorrect.
The demos HAVE tried to close this and failed each time. In fact, the last time this was mentioned, Orrin Hatch (R-Utah) said this must end and he took much criticism from the party.

>assuming the >democrats don't hold all bills hostage out of >spite.

Cite a single bill or legislation where the right, in the last twenty five years, voted to take away one of their own perks.

This incorrectly assumes the feds seek to stem a growing economy.
Besides, the feds already raised the rates.

>Why is it incorrect? The fed does raise rates to >cool an economy that grows too fast in order >to stop the growth of inflation.

You said nothing of the speed of the economic growth until now. You clearly made the incorrect assumption that the feds will seek to stem a growing economy, which is not only incorrect, but patently false.

>The economy IS growing. Only the most >myopic and biased partisan will deny it.

Only you took issue with the speed of recovery.

>The fed HAS already raised rates once, and >are poised to do it again. So tell me again now

>"false" and "incorrect" I am.

Of course they raised them,,they have nowhere to go but up. You are patently incorrect when you claimed the feds are raising interest rates to stem a growing economy, which is why you deleted and purged it from this post. the feds are NOT interested in stemming a growing economy. The fact that you need a qualifier by invoking speed of growth illustrates just how incorrect you realized you were when you claimed such ridiculous things.

>Oh, and check here, if you still don't believe >me:

>http://money.cnn.com/2004/11/08/news/econo

>my/fed_walkup/index.htm

Says nothing about the feds wishing to stem economy growth at this time. The feds are interested in growing the economy, not stunting it's growth when it begins to grow.

>When it begins to grow is already history. It's >been growing now for over 2 years. The rate >of growth has been taking a sharper rise as of >late which prompted the fed to look into rate >hikes.

"Sharper"? As opposed to what? The dismal last four years? Trust me, Dave, this more-hyped than factual upturn in the economy you claim is nowhere near enough to make the feds want to "stem the growth" of it.

>Yes, the Fed raised rates once. They can do it >again many more times. While the base rate >by which mortgages are written against are >not directly tied to the Fed rates (They tend to >follow the 10 year bond rate)

And the bond rate is set by.......taaa daaa!

>The bond rate is set by the market.

You're clueless, Dave. The bond rate is set by the FEDS and adjusted in RESPONSE to the market. This issue is now moot, as you clearly demonstrated you live in a non-reality world.

(SNIP)

Until you learn who sets the bond rates, you are in no position to to tell me anything about bonds and the feds.

>My prediction is that the home market will

>cool, but by that time other areas of the >economy will have recovered enough to cover

>any additional losses by the R.E. market.

Only the RE market isn't the only loss from which you have to select, it is merely the LAST one you have to select since it was the only thing propping up this farce of economic improvement heralded by the lying Bush administration.

>Once again, prove the lie. What lie?

An entire post will be forthcoming paying attributes to this man, as soon as I get some morefree time.

>I'm sure there are plenty of anti-Bush >propaganda sites which will offer all types of >claims. But those claims are not PROOF.

His direct quotes and contradictions are proof, in addition to his actions,...I will give you so much material you will be all over the place attributing his errors and goofs to everyone but himself.

>They are no different from your own claims.

Or yours.

>By every >economic indicator that has any credibility, our >economy has been steadily growing, despite >the volatility of the oil market.

Only by what you view as "credibility'. Again, the majority of economists predict a bad moon rising and the Bush admin is the only entity that is unable to comprehend this reckless spending on a needless war is creating a financial hole and deficit so large that the coming fallout of it is absolutely inevitable.

>Repeat after me: The Economy is growing.

>The GNP is on the rise. The deficit is >irrelevant.

The amazing part of it is, those of you who are unable to see the forest for the trees and are heralding falsely of how great the economy is at the present,

>The economy is not "great" , but it IS growing.

>Unemployment is at 5% which by

>all accounts is really not that bad.

By the revamped Bush math only.
One in three is unemployed in Ohio.

>Where?

You know,,that state just west of the one you reside.

>The "math" is done by the bureau of labor >statistics.

Again, you are clueless, the math is NOW done by the WH accounting office. This is the first time ever an administration has pulled this charade and changed not only the formula, but the entire organization that compues such figures.

The dollar is at a fifteen year low again

>That is due primarily to the widening trade

>deficit.

No. it is due to the mounting deficit PERIOD, the majority which is the direct fault of Iraq, not any trade deficit. The trade deficit is paltry when compared to the cost of the war in Iraq to the US adding to our deficit.

>I respectfully disagree.

About what?

>The war will end

>sometime.

The war will end when the boy count gets too high for acceptable casualty rates (whatever they are,,,how about it Dave, what is YOUR acceptable count of dead Americans for the right of an arab to vote?), when Bush is made to reinstate the draft and renigue on his campaign promise like daddy did, or when he leaves office.

>But the trade gap keeps widening. Again, you >are at odds with most economists.

Actually, I listen to Milton and Greenspan, and Greenspan has told Bush repeatedly the tax cuts are the wrong thing to do at a time like this, as it is a bandaid on a gushing hole that is getting stronger each day.

>Bush was not directly responsible for any of >those losses. You can not point to one

>economic policy or plan that he penned that

>can be tied to it.

Sure I can. I can point ot several examples. There were stops on his campaign trail (for his first term) where he promised fiscal aid to certain entities. By not following through on several of these promises (lies), many jobs were directly lost.

>Such as?

Are you testing me or are you claiming you really don't know? Because he made several promises to the factory workers, such as federal aid and grants designed to allow the companies to avoid bankruptcies....again, old on to this request, as it will be great to add these failures of Bush to follow through on his list of lies.

> The worst you can say is that Bush was a >victim of circumstances, not the orchestrator

>of them.

If this was true, the position of president would no longer be needed or valid, as it would be of figurehead status only. Somehoe, I don't believe YOU believe what you said, as you do not apply these principles to the opposite party.

>Holding someone responsible is only valid if >that person has any control over it.

Bush has THE final and authoritative control over the military, yet you claim all the military blunders and failed intel were somehow not his responsibility. As someone else told you the other day, Dave, you are full of hypocrisy.

>Unless a person is a prognosticator, he can't >possibly foresee catastrophic events which >may effect the economy.

Remain lucid and with me, Dave. No one mentioned anything remotely in line with your gab.

>Wake up! In this global economy, this is the >way it's going to be until the standard of living

>equalizes in the rest of the world.

LOL,,,not in your lifetime.

>Probably not, but that IS the ultimate solution.

And mucking with the numbers is not how it's going to be....this will end the moment Bush leaves office. here's another prediction it doesn't take a rcket scientist to offer: The Bush favorability rating will be at it's lowest this term.

>Is that a prediction or a hope?

Prediction. Dead Americans for an Arab's right to vote will not be tolerated once the false patriotic fervor of the campaign and novelty wear off.

Need proof of that, too? Under Bush, the economic leading index fell 3 points under his first half of term, then rebounded almost a full point and a half almost 8 months later. Bush called this "improving the economy" and said it was because of his tax cuts. Getting the economy to not even where it was when he took office is NOT improving the economy.

>That depends on your point of reference.

The point of reference was....the economy took a dive under Bush

>But not because of Bush.

Yes, his tax cuts contributed to it in a large way. You keep citing mystery economists, but perhaps the most brilliant of them all, Greenspan, is ignored in your invocations, and it's because he slammed Bush for his incompetence concerning the economy and deficit.

>The recession was already in motion before >he took office.

How much it rebounded is contested, but the consensus is that it has NOT rebounded to pre-911 status.

>Which has more to do with economic and >political situations which are beyond any >president's ability to correct.

The reasons are moot when the president is falsely telling us he is creating jobs and the economy is growing. Yes, the economy is growing slightly, but not getting it back to where it was when he took office is NOT the good news you and the Bush admin are trying to sell. And losing 300,000 well payig jobs and adding half a million low paying jobs is not doing anything for the economy, it merely is a way to shuffle the numbers to make them advantageous to the Bush agenda. It's fuzzy math, end of story.

>He did turn around a recession, and we have

>been growing since.

Please point to an act of legislation by Bush that you claim turned around the recession...remember, this is a recession that you, at the time, claimed did not exist.

>The tax cuts have been agreed by leading >economists, including Alan Greenspan, to >have been instrumental in lessening both the >duration and severity of the recession.

Cite it. You are wrong. Greenspan slammed Bush and said this was no time to implement tax cuts.

>I never claimed the recession did not exist.

>Please stop lying.

Alrighty then, please offer the time era of the recession in this administration of which you now agree took place.

> We are currently going in the right direction.

>It might not be fast enough for some of you.

Bush is the one that promised a "swift" campaign of "shock and awe". It was anything but swift, and even the arm chair generals knew "swift" was bullshit from day one.

>How does his prediction for the war relate to >the economy?

I have no clue,,you are the one that again entered time into the conversation. Are you feeling alright these days, Dave?

>You're shifting gears again.

I'm following your train of thought that is all over the place. You are now invoking subjects of time and incoherently asking me what they have to do with anything.

>And lest you forget, Bush also stated that the >war against terror would not be easy, or quick.

Only after Powell told him and he realized his predictions of a "swift" military campaign of "shock and awe" was bullshit and not possible.

>He even postulated that this war might be with >us for the rest of our adult lives.

Again this was after he goofed with an initial promise of a swift military campaign. dor some reason, this subject really gets you.

>But then things like 9/11, the growing threat of >terrorism, and the volatile oil market tend to

>slow things like economic growth.

Yes,,,,after 911, Bush failed to protect us, as we were hit again in Florida with Anthrax. What did Bush do there? Why, he dropped the ball, of course. Have you any clue the number of illegals pouring across the borders each day? How can this be when Bush told us the borders are secure?

>You don't want a president, you want

>Superman.

You are the one that said Bush protected us since 911,,,,I showed you that you were wrong.

> All you can do is throw rocks.

I'm not throwing rocks, I'm taking issue with the president when he lies and says our borders are secure and he is protecting us.

>Let me give you a clue. NOTHING we can do >now or in the near future will totally protect us >against ALL possible attacks.

Hehe,,I'm not the one buying into this bullshit and fearing for my life from terrorists.

>The best we can do is limit terrorist's options.

>Since we have not had a terrorist attack since

>9/11,

You are really that jaded, eh? The anthrax WAS a terrorist attack, but you may continue on with this course of denial.

> shows that our extra security is having some >effect. The fact that Al-Qaeda is disrupted, >disorganized, and on the run, doesn't allow >much in the way of time and resources to plan

>those "big" attacks.

On the run? They have always been "on the run", ,,yet, more Americans are dying daily than before. Yea,,,you sure know how to call success when you see it.

  How about the terrorists that held up that school in Russia?

>Is that Bush's fault too?

If they got in the country,,,,absolutely.

Are you aware of the reports that have some of them in the US, entering through Mexico into Arizona, disguised as illegal Mexican Immigrants?

>And according to the National Enquirer, Elvis >was sighted at a 7-11 in the upper >midwest.......

Aw, dave, reality is a little too much for you to handle today.

Please explain how this can possibly be when we are "moving in the right direction" and Bush tells us our borders are "secure"? At the port of Tampa, there is NO guard, no cops, no military. How can this be when Bush told us he is doing everything he can to secure our ports. He has done absolutely NOTHING, except throw money at the war and to red tape agencies, whcih, not too long ago, you claimed that "tossing money" to them isn't the answer.

Besides,,,,,,,,,,,,
Those would have to be some pretty heavy and main-stream "areas" that affect the majority of the US populace to makeup for the incredible massive record setting deficit Bush has the country owing. What areas are you predicting will rebound so strongly as to set incredible growth and earnings records in this term (which would have to take place to offset

>I predict gains in the medical, financial,

>recreation, and tech markets. These are areas
>where the U.S. still leads.

This may come as a surprise to you, but there will always be gains in the those markets in some fashion. You claimed areas will "rebound" to offset the national debt. In order for something to rebound, it must be repressed in some fashion, and the generic markets you mention have historically experienced growth.

>Were you lucid when the tech sector bombed

>in 2000?

This is an exception and not the rule, therefore, does not qualify as "historically".
Please try and remain focused and answer the question posed to you, not with another qusetion, but with an answer. Just in case you didn;t understand, here it is again:
You claimed areas will "rebound" to offset the national debt. In order for something to rebound, it must be repressed in some fashion, and the generic markets you mention have historically experienced growth. What specific areas are you predicting enough growth to offset the national debt?

>The deficit is meaningless. It's just a number

>on paper.

The deficit is a bill,,a bill that must be paid. To say it means nothing clearly indicates your knowledge of such.

>It's a number on paper that can be erased by >a simple stroke of a pen.

This akin to tossing a credit card bill in the trash, but I'm not surprised,,,folks like you always want to run up a bill and not pay for it.
Erasing the bill won't make the debt go away,,,illustrating what you know of it.

>Us common folks have never been >influenced by deficits before, so why should

>we now?

The blue collar worker, middle and lower class are those influenced MOST by mounting deficits and is reflected in consumer confidence (spending) and cosumerism in general when recessions hit. It isn't the wealthy cutting back on their lifestyle, it's the regular Joes.

>The deficit affects none of our normal >activities.

They effect them all.

> You still get paid, you still buy goods,

No,,,when the debt is mounting too high, inflation is bound to follow. Inflation is a period of reduced consumerism, IE; not buying durables, or purchasing a reduced amount of durable goods.

> and life goes on. It's not the boogieman that >the nay-sayers claim it is.

It's clearly something you are not in touch with.

Bush LIE #1 in regards to Iraq: "The evidence indicates that Iraq is reconstituting its nuclear weapons program ... Iraq has attempted to purchase high-strength aluminum tubes and other equipment need for gas centrifuges, which are used to enrich uranium for nuclear weapons." ☐ President Bush, Oct. 7, 2002, in Cincinnati.

FACT: This story, leaked and reported by Judith Miller in the New York Times, has turned out to be complete fabrication. Department of Energy officials, who monitor nuclear plants, say the tubes could not be used for enriching uranium. One intelligence analyst, who was part of the tubes investigation, angrily told The New Republic that, "You had senior American officials like Condoleezza Rice saying the only use of this aluminum really is uranium centrifuges. She said that on television. And that's just a lie."

LIE #2: "The British government has learned that Saddam Hussein recently sought significant quantities of uranium from Africa." ☐ President Bush, Jan.28, 2003, in the State of the Union address.

FACT: This whopper was based on a document that the White House already knew to be a forgery thanks to the CIA. Sold to Italian intelligence by some hustler, the document carried the signature of an official who had been out of office for 10 years and referenced a constitution that was no longer in effect. The ex-ambassador who the CIA sent to check out the story is pissed: "They knew the Niger story was a flat-out lie," he told the New Republic. "They [the White House] were unpersuasive about aluminum tubes and added this to make their case more strongly."

LIE #3: "We believe [Saddam] has, in fact, reconstituted nuclear weapons." ☐ Vice President Cheney on March 16, 2003 on "Meet the Press."

FACT: There was and is absolutely zero basis for this statement. CIA reports up through 2002 showed no evidence of an Iraqi nuclear weapons program.

LIE #4: "[The CIA possesses] solid reporting of senior-level contacts between Iraq and al-Qaeda going back a decade." ☐ CIA Director George Tenet in a written statement released Oct. 7, 2002 and echoed in that evening's speech by President Bush.

FACT: Intelligence agencies knew of tentative contacts between Saddam and al-Qaeda in the early '90s, but found no proof of a continuing relationship. In other words, by tweaking language, Tenet and Bush spun the intelligence180 degrees to say exactly the opposite of what it suggested.

LIE #5: "We've learned that Iraq has trained al-Qaeda members in bomb-making and poisons and deadly gases ... Alliance with terrorists could allow the Iraqi regime to attack America without leaving any fingerprints." ☐ President Bush, Oct. 7.

FACT: No evidence of this has ever been leaked or produced. Colin Powell told the U.N. this alleged training took place in a camp in northern Iraq. To his great embarrassment, the area he indicated was later revealed to be outside Iraq's control and patrolled by Allied war planes.

LIE #6: "We have also discovered through intelligence that Iraq has a growing fleet of manned and unmanned aerial vehicles that could be used to disperse chemical or biological weapons across broad areas. We are concerned that Iraq is exploring ways of using these UAVs [unmanned aerial vehicles] for missions targeting the United States." ☐ President Bush, Oct. 7.

FACT: Said drones can't fly more than 300 miles, and Iraq is 6000 miles from the U.S. coastline. Furthermore, Iraq's drone-building program wasn't much more advanced than your average model plane enthusiast. "Manned aerial vehicle" is merely a scary way to say "plane". The Bush Fear factor at work since day one.

LIE #7: "We have seen intelligence over many months that they have chemical and biological weapons, and that they have dispersed them and that they're weaponized and that, in one case at least, the command and control arrangements have been established." ☐ President Bush, Feb. 8, 2003, in a national radio address.

FACT: Despite a massive nationwide search by U.S. and British forces, there are no signs, traces or examples of chemical weapons being deployed in the field, or anywhere else during the war.

LIE #8: "Our conservative estimate is that Iraq today has a stockpile of between 100 and 500 tons of chemical weapons agent. That is enough to fill 16,000 battlefield rockets." ☐ Secretary of State Colin Powell, Feb. 5 2003, in remarks to the UN Security Council.

FACT: Putting aside the glaring fact that not one drop of this massive stockpile has been found, as previously reported on AlterNet our own intelligence reports show that these stocks ☐ if they existed ☐ were well past their use-by date and therefore useless as weapon fodder.

LIE #9: "We know where [Iraq's WMD] are. They're in the area around Tikrit and Baghdad and east, west, south, and north somewhat." ☐ Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld, March 30, 2003, in statements to the press.

FACT: Needless to say, no such weapons were found, not to the east, west, south or north, somewhat or otherwise.

LIE #10: "Yes, we found a biological laboratory in Iraq which the UN prohibited." ☐ President Bush in remarks in Poland, published

FACT: This was reference to the discovery of two modified truck trailers that the CIA claimed were potential mobile biological weapons lab. But British and American experts -- including the State Department's intelligence wing in a report released this week -- have since declared this to be untrue. According to the British, and much to Prime Minister Tony Blair's embarrassment, the trailers are actually exactly what Iraq said they were; facilities to fill weather balloons, sold to them by the British themselves.

Now, for those of you of which this is preaching to the choir, sit back and enjoy the silencing of the lambs,,,er,,right.

THE REAL REASON FOR ATTACKING IRAQ
AMERICA burns a quarter of all the oil consumed by humanity. A study sponsored by the US Council on Foreign Relations says that "the American people continue to demand plentiful and cheap energy without sacrifice or inconvenience". Transport in the United States alone burns 66 per cent of America's petroleum.
One estimate is that the world's oil reserves will begin to decline within five to 10 years at the rate of about two million barrels a day. In the Middle East, the only country capable of significantly increasing its production is Iraq, once described by Vice President Cheney as "the great prize".
At present, America depends on Iraq's neighbour Saudi Arabia, not just for oil but for keeping the price of oil down. However, Saudi Arabia is the home of al-Qaeda, and Osama bin Laden and 15 of the alleged September 11 hijackers.
THE grievance against the Americans for their imperial interventions in the Middle East is said to be deepest in the country that was invented by British imperialism and has since been maintained by the US as an oil colony.
If America installs a colonial regime in Baghdad, certainly its dependence on Saudi Arabia will be dramatically eased, and its grip on the world's greatest oil market will be tightened. The price, for the people of the region, for Americans and the rest of us, will be an enduring turmoil similar to that of Palestine, exemplified by last week's terror bombing of an Israeli hotel in Kenya.
This is the hidden agenda of the "war on terrorism" - a term that is no more than a euphemism for the Bush administration's exploitation of the September 11 attacks and America's accelerating imperial ambitions. In the past 14 months, on the pretext of "fighting terror", US military bases have been established at the gateways to the greatest oil and gas fields on earth, especially in Central Asia, which is also coveted as a "great prize".
In Afghanistan, the president, Hamid Karzai, guarded by 46 American special forces troops, was employed by a subsidiary of Unocal, the American oil company. The post-Taliban US ambassador is a senior executive of Unocal, and a pipeline to carry lucrative oil and gas across the country from the Caspian Sea will be built by Unocal.

I want to thank the moms who are here. Thank you very much for you hospitality There's a lot of talk about budgets right now, and I'm here to talk about the budget. My job as the President is to submit a budget to the Congress and to set priorities, and one of the priorities that we've talked about is making sure the health care systems are funded." ☐ Egleston Children's Hospital, Atlanta, Georgia 3/1/01

What Bush did:
  Bush's first budget proposed cutting grants to children's hospitals like the one he visited by 15% ($34 million). His 2004 budget additionally proposes to cut 30% ($86 million) out of grants to children's hospitals.

"A secure and efficient border is key to our economic security." ☐
Bush, 9/9/02

While Bush did hold a photo-op to sign legislation promising more INS/Border Patrol staff and facilities, his budget provided no additional money for this. Additionally, in August of 2004, Bush vetoed $6.25M for promised pay upgrades for Border Patrol agents. Additionally, he vetoed ALL $39 million for the Container Security Initiative.
His 2004 Budget slashed total "Border and Transportation Security" by $284 million.

Yet, in order to illustrate the heavy spending by the Bush administration, it has been claimed by his detractors, that Bush has not vetoed a single piece of spending legislation. So which is it? Has Bush indeed refused to veto any spending package, or are the above claims correct?

In either case, someone has lied on the other side of the fence.

Some solid sources would certainly make the case a bit clearer.

This is all well and good, but it proves nothing. Just because someone writes the word "FACT" before providing their editorial comments does not make it so. I have heard other "facts", relating to many of these claims, which are equally credible which state something completely different.

So more credible sources are required before those "facts" can truly be considered as such.

Again, much of those facts, if you would bother to follow the politics in the US, originated with the Bush admin. Cited are examples of them contradicting themselves, many times over, to cover the lie, much repeated incompetent intel, or whatever term you wish apply to their incorrect and deliberate fabricated statements, which, according to

Bush, 9/9/02

While Bush did hold a photo-op to sign legislation promising more INS/Border Patrol staff and facilities, his budget provided no additional money for this. Additionally, in August of 2004, Bush vetoed $6.25M for promised pay upgrades for Border Patrol agents. Additionally, he vetoed ALL $39 million for the Container Security Initiative. His 2004 Budget slashed total "Border and Transportation Security" by $284 million.

Stay with me, Dave, don't go invoking and introducing subjects and asking me about their origin in order to deflect acknowledging this Bush lie/flip-flop, whatever term you choose to semantically apply.

> Has Bush indeed refused to veto any

Well, Dave, IF you would have read his budget, you would not have to ask, considering you claimed you keep yourself well informed of his matters. Again, this illustrates you have not. The facts of this case, are there, and cut and dry. You can cry about what definition you apply to "fact" all day. It won't change what took place or the matter that you are unaware of it and thus, deny it.
(shrug) You can choose to believe either A) what took place, B) that Bush never claimed he was increasing border patrol, or C) Claim he DIDN'T veto 39 million for the border patrol. illustratig once again, you need to read what it is this president is doing, as you clearly indicate you havent the foggiest.

>In either case, someone has lied on the other

Bush is the only party here. He made the claim in 2002, and he plucked money from the budget for the border patrol this summer. It's justifiably understandable you do not concern yourself with the border issues in Pa., but Dave, this is the unadulterated truth. Truth sometimes hurt, Dave, especially when you come to realize,,,you were wrong.

Yea,,those bills this information was gleened from,,tsk tsk,,,,useless reading.
Try googling "Container Security Initiative".

Intel is intel. Bush does not have his own intel. It all came from the

The president does not gather intel. The president is not in the position to "edit" intel either. The intel is available to every member of congress from the same sources that the president uses.

That you would attempt to spin this yard about the president's intel somehow being "separate" from the rest is only a feeble attempt to place a greater amount of blame on the president than really belongs there.

This discussion is over since you have plainly demonstrated that you know next to nothing about the market, or the economy in general.

The bond rate is inversely proportional to the bond price. When people buy into the bond market, the bond price rises, and the yield (interest rate) declines. When the stock market declined in 2000, people jumped out of the stock market and into the relative stability of the bond market. The huge inrush of people caused the bond price to rise and the yield to plummet. As the stock market continues to improve, people will start moving out of the bond market (which offers stability, but not much ROI) and back into the stock market. The bond price will fall and the yield will rise again. I predict that the bond rate will be up to at least 6% by next spring.

Let's see who you are saying are not credible.

Department of Energy officials, who monitor nuclear plants, say the tubes could not be used for enriching uranium. One intelligence analyst, who was part of the tubes investigation, angrily told The New Republic that, "You had senior American officials like Condoleezza Rice saying the only use of this aluminum really is uranium centrifuges. She said that on television. And that's just a lie.")

Gee,,,that source was the Department of Energy. What conspiracy theory do you have for them conjuring up such nonsense, Dave?

(LIE #2: "The British government has learned that Saddam Hussein recently sought significant quantities of uranium from Africa." ☐
President Bush, Jan.28, 2003, in the State of the Union address.
FACT: This whopper was based on a document that the White House already knew to be a forgery thanks to the CIA. Sold to Italian intelligence by some hustler, the document carried the signature of an official who had been out of office for 10 years and referenced a constitution that was no longer in effect. The ex-ambassador who the CIA sent to check out the story is pissed: "They knew the Niger story was a flat-out lie," he told the New Republic. "They [the White House] were unpersuasive about aluminum tubes and added this to make their case more strongly.")

Above, you flacidly discount the CIA, who, in a previous post, said was responsible for the gathering of such intel.

FACT: There was and is absolutely zero basis for this statement. CIA reports up through 2002 showed no evidence of an Iraqi nuclear weapons program.)

Again, you discount the CIA in the above, who you earlier claimed was responsible for the gathering of this intel.

(LIE #4: "[The CIA possesses] solid reporting of senior-level contacts between Iraq and al-Qaeda going back a decade." ☐ CIA Director George Tenet in a written statement released
Oct. 7, 2002 and echoed in that evening's speech by President Bush.
FACT: Intelligence agencies knew of tentative contacts between Saddam and al-Qaeda in the early '90s, but found no proof of a continuing relationship. In other words, by tweaking language, Tenet and Bush spun the intelligence 180 degrees to say exactly the opposite of what it suggested.)

I guess this (above) is the sole item in this list you will argue vehemently is true, but all the rest of the items need this "more credible source" you speak of.

(LIE #5: "We've learned that Iraq has trained al-Qaeda members in bomb-making and poisons and deadly gases ... Alliance with terrorists could allow the Iraqi regime to attack America without leaving any fingerprints." ☐ President Bush, Oct. 7.
FACT: No evidence of this has ever been leaked or produced. Colin Powell told the U.N. this alleged training took place in a camp in northern Iraq. To his great embarrassment, the area he indicated was later revealed to be outside Iraq's control and patrolled by Allied war planes.)

Self-explanatory, leaving your claim to undermind Powell and abdicate the blame.

(LIE #6: "We have also discovered through intelligence that Iraq has a growing fleet of manned and unmanned aerial vehicles that could be used to disperse chemical or biological weapons across broad areas. We are concerned that Iraq is exploring ways of using these UAVs [unmanned aerial vehicles] for missions targeting the United States." ☐
President Bush, Oct. 7.
FACT: Said drones can't fly more than 300 miles, and Iraq is 6000 miles from the U.S. coastline. Furthermore, Iraq's drone-building program wasn't much more advanced than your average model plane enthusiast. "Manned aerial vehicle" is merely a scary way to say "plane". The Bush

Fear factor at work since day one.)

This one is one of my favorites. Again, because you are not aware of the situation, asking to see "proof" that these drones can only fly 300 miles TOPS is more than I will offer you.

(LIE #7: "We have seen intelligence over many months that they have chemical and biological weapons, and that they have dispersed them and that they're weaponized and that, in one case at least, the command and control arrangements have been established." ☐ President Bush, Feb. 8, 2003, in a national radio address.

Well, in the above, you are at a paradox, for Bush clearly was wrong again,,but of course, he was only following that same failed intel you claim was the fault of the CIA and other countries who should shoulder no blame. You chose to believe a negative that was never proved, based on a claim, from an organization that has had the majorty of its intel incorrect from day one, rather than err on the side of logic.

(LIE #8: "Our conservative estimate is that Iraq today has a stockpile of between 100 and 500 tons of chemical weapons agent. That is enough to fill 16,000 battlefield rockets." ☐ Secretary of State Colin Powell, Feb. 5 2003, in remarks to the UN Security Council.

FACT: Putting aside the glaring fact that not one drop of this massive stockpile has been found, as previously reported, our own intelligence reports show that these stocks ☐ if they existed ☐ were well past their use-by date and therefore useless as weapon fodder.

Well, gee Dave,,in order to believe this,,do you need to see those iNtel reports from the top brass that Bush dismissed when they told him what he didn't want to hear concerning Iraq? The 911 report is chock full of them.

(LIE #9: "We know where [Iraq's WMD] are. They're in the area around Tikrit and Baghdad and east, west, south, and north somewhat." ☐ Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld, March 30, 2003, in statements to the press.

FACT: Needless to say, no such weapons were found, not to the east, west, south or north, somewhat or otherwise.)

Yet, you choose to believe a mere claim from an entity that has been consistent with their failed intel and base your belief on the possibility of a negative existing. Introductory Science 101 thoroughly debunks the validity of believing in a negative that exists only in theory or thought.

(LIE #10: "Yes, we found a biological laboratory in Iraq which the UN prohibited." ☐ President Bush in remarks in Poland, published internationally June 1, 2003

FACT: This was reference to the discovery of two modified truck trailers that the CIA claimed were potential mobile biological weapons lab. But British and American experts -- including the State Department's intelligence wing in a report released this week -- have since declared this to be untrue. According to the British, and much to Prime Minister Tony Blair's embarrassment, the trailers are actually exactly what Iraq said they were; facilities to fill weather balloons, sold to them by the British themselves.)

And above, once again, the entity you attack and say is not credible, is GW's State Department.

Now, for those of you of which this is preaching to the choir, sit back and enjoy the silencing of the lambs,,,er,,right.

THE REAL REASON FOR ATTACKING IRAQ
AMERICA burns a quarter of all the oil consumed by humanity. A study sponsored by the US Council on Foreign Relations says that "the American people continue to demand plentiful and cheap energy without sacrifice or inconvenience". Transport in the United States alone burns 66 per cent of America's petroleum.
One estimate is that the world's oil reserves will begin to decline within five to 10 years at the rate of about two million barrels a day. In the Middle East, the only country capable of significantly increasing its production is Iraq, once described by Vice President Cheney as "the great prize".
At present, America depends on Iraq's neighbour Saudi Arabia, not just for oil but for keeping the price of oil down. However, Saudi Arabia is the home of al-Qaeda, and Osama bin Laden and 15 of the alleged September 11 hijackers.
THE grievance against the Americans for their imperial interventions in the Middle East is said to be deepest in the country that was invented by British imperialism and has since been maintained by the US as an oil colony.
If America installs a colonial regime in Baghdad, certainly its dependence on Saudi Arabia will be dramatically eased, and its grip on the world's greatest oil market will be tightened. The price, for the people of the region, for Americans and the rest of us, will be an enduring turmoil similar to that of Palestine, exemplified by last week's terror bombing of an Israeli hotel in Kenya. This is the hidden agenda of the "war on terrorism" - a term that is no more than a euphemism for the Bush administration's exploitation of the September 11 attacks and America's accelerating imperial ambitions. In the past 14 months, on the pretext of "fighting terror", US military bases have been established at the gateways to the greatest oil and gas fields on earth, especially in Central Asia, which is also coveted as a "great prize". In Afghanistan, the president, Hamid Karzai, guarded by 46 American special forces troops, was employed by a subsidiary of Unocal, the American oil company. The post-Taliban US ambassador is a senior executive of Unocal, and a pipeline to carry lucrative oil and gas across the country from the Caspian Sea will be built by Unocal.

>A far different cry than the accusation that the

The handpicked staff IS an extension of the president.

>It's still not the same thing.

Only to you because you are not aware of how a chain of command works or is implemented.

>For that matter what proof do you have that

>Rumsfeld lied as well?

The 911 report shows how they all lied.

>Proof please. State the page and section >which concludes that they lied.

Again,,another post.

>Unlike your shadowy propaganda sources, the >911 commission report is out there for all to >see.

Yea,,and lucky for Bush it wasn't required reading for voters. I'm going to give you page numbers and paragraphs where it shows Bush ignoring warnings,,a report titled "Osama determined to attack US with aircraft", yet, aftre 911, Bush, and many of his staff, claimed they had no warnings.

>There's a big difference between acting >on faulty intelligence, and deliberately >fabricating an untruth.

>You cannot prove the latter over the former.

>You can only suspect and believe out of faith.

I believe the 911 report.

>The 911 commission reports does not state on >any page that the Bush administration lied >about anything that they're being accused of.

Dave, go on and tell the world Condi AND Bush didn't deny warnings concerning Usama.

Since the wmds were not found, that means they were never there, or the Bush admin FAILED in their objective,,,,,stopping their transfer or proliferation.

>Or that they were MOVED sometime in the 12

>years since the end of the Gulf war

If true, it solidly satisfies the Bush lie via Rumsfeld saying "WE" knew
where they were in Iraq in 2002.

>The intelligence we had at the time convinced

>us that we did know where they were in 2002.

Again, this was handpicked Bush intel that is wrong all the time, which you have no problem with. If this were a business, he would have been gone long ago. Bush is responsible for the intel he employs, selects, uses, listens to, and acts upon,of course, this concept eludes you.

Either: A) the weapons were moved between that time and the beginning of the war.
A massive endeavor that could not go undetected by satellite and thermal technology.

>A copy of which was supposedly circulating >around not that long ago. There was recorded

>"activity" in and around Saddam's palaces and >other places. We can ascertain only so much >from a satellite image.

Wrong. They can read the license plate off a vehicle, let alone distinguish mass convoys from mundane "activity".

Or B) they were never there, and the intel was faulty. Or C) the whole thing was a deliberate lie.

>Why do you choose to believe "C" when there >is no hard evidence that discounts either "A"

>or "B"?

Perhaps because science dictates discarding theories that can not be substantiated with basis in fact. Matters that are not based in fact and exist only as an absent negative can not be proved, therefore, are scientifically discounted.

Or, perhaps because I am educated on this matter to the point that I understand what a massive undertaking would have had to take place to merely "move" them. Once again, massive convoys (required) and irregular traffic from the areas where these weapons were alleged to have been (didn't rummy say they were in the North, South, east, west areas of Baghdad, or was that Bush?) could not have gone undetected.

>Unless you possess a security clearance and >are part of the intel community you know no >more than any other news junkie.

Don't turn this personal, Dave. Anyone can become educated on such items, let alone those who may have family that are in the service and work with such things on a daily basis. You are making me grin, as you fail to entertain the myriad of ways one can be educated on the subject of satellite imagery, including how it used by the military and what company makes the equipment, in addition to a host of others.

>and when we went in again in 2003.

If true, it solidly satisfies the validity of them failing to prevent their "transfer"

>It's hard to prevent their transfer before we >arrive on scene.

I agree, another bullshit line by Bush. He shouldn't have said that, as you illustratte.

>He was referring to "further" transfers.

Oh, so now you are saying they KNEW there were transfers taking place, which means they not only failed to stop them from transferring, but lost sight of ALL those weapons, in the north, south, west, and east,,every single one,,poof,,right under their noses, eh? Add this incompetence to the repeated failures you acknowledge by the Bush Intel, and,,,,,,well, you get the picture, even if you want to stick your head in the sand.

>Concluding that they were never there is >based on an assumption, not on fact.

Same with your conclusion on them being there.

>I agree, but I tend to give them the benefit of >the doubt, while you would appear to be ready >to burn them at the stake based on little more >than hearsay.

What was hearsay, was that weapons existed. We went to war on your president's "hearsay", I would say that is akin to burning one at the stake on hearsay.

But,,,,,,,
No one said they were NEVER there. Bush (via Rumsfeld said they KNEW where they (wmds) were in 2002 and again in 2003.

>Based on intel.

Not Kerry or Clinton's intel..Bush intel..it's always the Bush intel that is faulty.

>Intel is intel.

Illustrating once again, you havne;t the foggiest.

> Bush does not have his own intel.

You know, Dave, if you are Soma, you need check your ALT enzyme levels.

>It all came from the same place.

See above.
I am not going to teach you what you should have learned in grammar and high school regarding each president selecting their own staff and heads of departments and the rewriting of those department's functions. policies, rules, and anything else related, at whim, which is standard procedure.

>Clinton had

>the same intel as Bush did

Again, you are so wrong, it's frightening.

>and came to the same conclusions about

>Saddam.

Yet, the 911 report clearly says the Bush administration was warned of Usama, while bush and Condosleeza claimed they were not. Several other key Bush players are named as well.

>Same goes for Senator Kerry. They are ALL >on record stating that Saddam was a threat >that needed to be removed.

>Either way, it still doesn't prove that Bush

>LIED about it. The worst you can say is that >he responded to faulty intelligence.

That's abdicating personal responsibility, something you always claimed
you were for.

>No, it's placing the blame where it belongs.

Assuming it was failed intel (yet, again), who do you feel should be held accountable and how?

>The people who's job it is to provide the intel.

Names, please.

>I don't have a security clearance, so I cannot >provide this info.

So you are of the mind the soldier or little guy that did the footwork should be held fully responsible while those who gave the orders to "make a connection to Iraq" should not....ah,,yes, I had that figured of you long ago.

> The exact names of the people involved in >immaterial anyway as the point is still valid.

And what should be done to these individuals who were following orders to make a case to attack Iraq?

>Including several other nations, who were in >full agreement with our intel.

Wrong. The US does not and has not ever went to war based on information provided by a third party (another country).

>It most certainly does (and did). We relied >heavily on intel provided by the Brits as well >as the Russians.

What war? Who did we attack based on Intel supplied by those countries?

>It was ALL considered.

This is your somantic, er, semantic spin or ill-conceived vocabulary, again. "Considered" does not equate going to war BASED on foreign intel.

In fact, I believe

>What you believe is irrelevant. What is a >matter of fact is all that matters.

Stay original and try not to permit yourself to get personal again,

there
exists a standing passage that addresses this item specifically by the military that says any information not gathered by the US that indicates military action on our behalf may be neccessary MUST be affirmed, reaffirmed, and affirmed yet a third time by the US.

>Well then you won't mind providing this "rule".

I can provide many things to you, Dave, but your seeking anything is moot, as you just recently claimed anything written can be erased, thereby espousing the belief that you assume because something written can be erased, it somehow detracts from its validity.
Besides, you need much more of an education in civics than I am willing to lend you. But pay attention, 'cause a few folks who know what they are talking about have been schooling you on the Bush issue.

>Intelligence that several other countries

>concurred

Where are they now?

>Same place they've always been.

Nope,,you said they concurred,,,,,well, they no longer concur,,,,,that is not the same place or position as then. It helps to shake the dirt out of your ears when pulling your head out of the sand.

>with along with several prominent >democrats including one Senator Kerry. That >is all a matter of record.

Yes, they believed the president.

>No, they believed the intel.

Whose Intel, dave? The president's.

>No, the CIA's and the intel from our allies.

You again demonstrate your ignorance of the fact the president selects his own intel.

>The same intel that these same prominent >democrats (before Bush too office of course)

>were using when they were making their >statements on the record supporting action >against Iraq.

>You can't seriously expect anyone to believe

>that a liberal democrat(s) would take the word

>of a republican president and go on the record
>in support of him, do you?

Happens all the time, Dave.

>Not in this universe.

Sure it does, Dave. You are hell bent on making damn good and certain no one mistakes your devotion to your party for being up on what's taking place in your party.

It was not their failed intel, it was
the president's. And it was failed Intel all the way since day one.

>The president didn't gather the intel,

You fail to understand the manner in whcih the military functions. The country is the president's ship, he is ultimately responsible,,not some other country which you abdicate resposibility from the president.

>The president does not gather intel. The >president is not in the position to "edit" intel >either. The intel is available to every member >of congress from the same sources that the >president uses.

>That you would attempt to spin this yard about >the president's intel somehow being

>"separate" from the rest

I said nothing of the sort. You are unraveling at a fervent pace.

>is only a feeble attempt to place a greater >amount of blame on the president than really >belongs there.

What blame "beliongs there", dave?

>that was

>the job of the CIA, and the intel agencies of

>our allies.

No Dave. Such sensitive Intel is not farmed out to other countries and it is the job of the president to insure our safety and that safety is derived via domestic owned intel. It is NOT another country's job to be responsible for our well being, safety, security, and intel.

>We have agreements with many of our NATO >allies to share intel. It happens all the time.

Sharing is not the same as relying upon it for a reason of war, as you claimed and are frantically spinning.

>We've been sharing intel with those same >allies since the 1st world war.

We damn sure have, yet it is not their responsibility to make certain the Intel is accurate or even true, for that matter,,it's the US'. You clearly are not informed of this war you attempted to speak of involving these other countries, as there were clearly times of deliberate false intel given to the US, but you have demonstrated you know nothing of such things by claiming the president of the US bases his decisions upon failed intel of other countries......without bothering to check if it was true or not,,,but the facts are nothing of what you would like,,,the facts are,,this was BUSH intel, US intel than told us all this bullshit.

>The same exact intel was given to >the congress as was given to the president.

>When the intel was examined, the congress >came to roughly the same conclusion as the >president. You don't think for a minute that the >congress would accept "sanitized" intel >straight from the white house do you? You >can't be that naive.

I'm not, but you sure are. Google "Pulitzer" and "St. Petersburg Times" and "Bush" for an example of how the Bush family manufactures their wars.

>I am not interested in the editorial opinions of >equally clueless people with an axe to grind.

LOL,,,,like those who award Pulitzers.

>I am only interested in verifiable FACTS.

Keep talking,,,

They provided MANUFACTURED satellite photos to congress, showing massive troop buildup on the Iraqi border when their were none,,not a single one. The Times won a Pulitzer for breaking this story by purchasing, at great expense, their own satellite photos debunking the Bush lies. No other media covered this story.

>Then why hasn't anyone seen it?

Many have seen it, Dave, this proves you are clueless of all you profess.

>If it won a pulitzer, we'd all know about it.

You must be under the influence...eveyone who cares, does know about it. After you sober up, go check it out for your self, but then again, you are the party that claimed everyone from the Bush admin and his departments are not credible sources.

I'm not the one claiming the feds don't set the bond rates,,you are,

by the feds in response to what the market does...no magic involved, davie. The market doesn't magically move the bond rates,,,the FEDS move the bond rates in response to the market. Now tell me more of what else

Bush LIE #1 in regards to Iraq: "The evidence indicates that Iraq is reconstituting its nuclear weapons program ... Iraq has attempted to purchase high-strength aluminum tubes and other equipment need for gas centrifuges, which are used to enrich uranium for nuclear weapons." - President Bush, Oct. 7, 2002, in Cincinnati.

FACT: This story, leaked and reported by Judith Miller in the New York Times, has turned out to be complete fabrication. Department of Energy officials, who monitor nuclear plants, say the tubes could not be used for enriching uranium. One intelligence analyst, who was part of the tubes investigation, angrily told The New Republic that, "You had senior American officials like Condoleezza Rice saying the only use of this aluminum really is uranium centrifuges. She said that on television. And that's just a lie."

LIE #2: "The British government has learned that Saddam Hussein recently sought significant quantities of uranium from Africa." - President Bush, Jan.28, 2003, in the State of the Union address.

FACT: This whopper was based on a document that the White House already knew to be a forgery thanks to the CIA. Sold to Italian intelligence by some hustler, the document carried the signature of an official who had been out of office for 10 years and referenced a constitution that was no longer in effect. The ex-ambassador who the CIA sent to check out the story is pissed: "They knew the Niger story was a flat-out lie," he told the New Republic. "They [the White House] were unpersuasive about aluminum tubes and added this to make their case more strongly."

LIE #3: "We believe [Saddam] has, in fact, reconstituted nuclear weapons." - Vice President Cheney on March 16, 2003 on "Meet the Press."

FACT: There was and is absolutely zero basis for this statement. CIA reports up through 2002 showed no evidence of an Iraqi nuclear weapons program.

LIE #4: "[The CIA possesses] solid reporting of senior-level contacts between Iraq and al-Qaeda going back a decade." - CIA Director George Tenet in a written statement released

Oct. 7, 2002 and echoed in that evening's speech by President Bush.

FACT: Intelligence agencies knew of tentative contacts between Saddam and al-Qaeda in the early '90s, but found no proof of a continuing relationship. In other words, by tweaking language, Tenet and Bush spun the intelligence180 degrees to say exactly the opposite of what it suggested.

LIE #5: "We've learned that Iraq has trained al-Qaeda members in bomb-making and poisons and deadly gases ... Alliance with terrorists could allow the Iraqi regime to attack America without leaving any fingerprints." - President Bush, Oct. 7.

FACT: No evidence of this has ever been leaked or produced. Colin Powell told the U.N. this alleged training took place in a camp in northern Iraq. To his great embarrassment, the area he indicated was later revealed to be outside Iraq's control and patrolled by Allied war planes.

LIE #6: "We have also discovered through intelligence that Iraq has a growing fleet of manned and unmanned aerial vehicles that could be used to disperse chemical or biological weapons across broad areas. We are concerned that Iraq is exploring ways of using these UAVs [unmanned aerial vehicles] for missions targeting the United States." - President Bush, Oct. 7.

FACT: Said drones can't fly more than 300 miles, and Iraq is 6000 miles from the U.S. coastline. Furthermore, Iraq's drone-building program wasn't much more advanced than your average model plane enthusiast. "Manned aerial vehicle" is merely a scary way to say "plane". The Bush Fear factor at work since day one.

LIE #7: "We have seen intelligence over many months that they have chemical and biological weapons, and that they have dispersed them and that they're weaponized and that, in one case at least, the command and control arrangements have been established." - President Bush, Feb. 8, 2003, in a national radio address.

FACT: Despite a massive nationwide search by U.S. and British forces, there are no signs, traces or examples of chemical weapons being deployed in the field, or anywhere else during the war.

LIE #8: "Our conservative estimate is that Iraq today has a stockpile of between 100 and 500 tons of chemical weapons agent. That is enough to fill 16,000 battlefield rockets." - Secretary of State Colin Powell, Feb. 5 2003, in remarks to the UN Security Council.

FACT: Putting aside the glaring fact that not one drop of this massive stockpile has been found, as previously reported on AlterNet our own intelligence reports show that these stocks - if they existed - were well past their use-by date and therefore useless as weapon fodder.

LIE #9: "We know where [Iraq's WMD] are. They're in the area around Tikrit and Baghdad and east, west, south, and north somewhat." - Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld, March 30, 2003, in statements to the press.

FACT: Needless to say, no such weapons were found, not to the east, west, south or north, somewhat or otherwise.

LIE #10: "Yes, we found a biological laboratory in Iraq which the UN prohibited." - President Bush in remarks in Poland, published internationally June 1, 2003

FACT: This was reference to the discovery of two modified truck trailers that the CIA claimed were potential mobile biological weapons lab. But British and American experts -- including the State Department's intelligence wing in a report released this week -- have since declared this to be untrue. According to the British, and much to Prime Minister Tony Blair's embarrassment, the trailers are actually exactly what Iraq said they were; facilities to fill weather balloons, sold to them by the British themselves.

Now, for those of you of which this is preaching to the choir, sit back and enjoy the silencing of the lambs,,,er,,right.

THE REAL REASON FOR ATTACKING IRAQ
AMERICA burns a quarter of all the oil consumed by humanity. A study sponsored by the US Council on Foreign Relations says that "the American people continue to demand plentiful and cheap energy without sacrifice or inconvenience". Transport in the United States alone burns 66 per cent of America's petroleum.
One estimate is that the world's oil reserves will begin to decline within five to 10 years at the rate of about two million barrels a day. In the Middle East, the only country capable of significantly increasing its production is Iraq, once described by Vice President Cheney as "the great prize".
At present, America depends on Iraq's neighbour Saudi Arabia, not just for oil but for keeping the price of oil down. However, Saudi Arabia is the home of al-Qaeda, and Osama bin Laden and 15 of the alleged September 11 hijackers.
THE grievance against the Americans for their imperial interventions in the Middle East is said to be deepest in the country that was invented by British imperialism and has since been maintained by the US as an oil colony.
If America installs a colonial regime in Baghdad, certainly its dependence on Saudi Arabia will be dramatically eased, and its grip on the world's greatest oil market will be tightened. The price, for the people of the region, for Americans and the rest of us, will be an enduring turmoil similar to that of Palestine, exemplified by last week's terror bombing of an Israeli hotel in Kenya.
This is the hidden agenda of the "war on terrorism" - a term that is no more than a euphemism for the Bush administration's exploitation of the September 11 attacks and America's accelerating imperial ambitions. In the past 14 months, on the pretext of "fighting terror", US military bases have been established at the gateways to the greatest oil and gas fields on earth, especially in Central Asia, which is also coveted as a "great prize".

In Afghanistan, the president, Hamid Karzai, guarded by 46 American special forces troops, was employed by a subsidiary of Unocal, the American oil company. The post-Taliban US ambassador is a senior executive of Unocal, and a pipeline to carry lucrative oil and gas across the country from the Caspian Sea will be built by Unocal.

Because of the capabilities of the many US intelligence agencies.
There must be -at least- a couple dozen spy satellites roaming the heavens with photographic resolution that can read the logo on your baseball cap. Some of those satellites pick up EM transmissions (TEMPEST) from sources as weak as a CB radio, a cordless phone, or even an unsecured land-line. They have spies on the ground that can gather info that can't be obtained in any other way. There are squads of people back here in the states whose sole purpose is to accumulate seemingly unimportant information and put it together like a jigsaw puzzle. And that's just the intelligence services of the US. You can bet that Israeli and UK intel was at work in Iraq, too.

Now if the US had evidence of the existence of WMDs at ANY TIME after the first war, and if those weapons were as damned important as Bush claims they were, it's extremely unlikely that the US would take it's eye off the ball for one second! With all the intelligence gathering capability we have, those weapons (as well as their manufacturing facilities) would have been found, assessed and monitored. If Iraq moved the weapons we would know when they were moved, how they were moved, and where they were moved to.

I find it EXTREMELY unlikely that the US, UK -and- Israel had faulty information, i.e, that Iraq could thwart the intelligence efforts of any one of those three countries and cover up the existence of such weapons in the quantities claimed by Bush. I also find it EXTREMELY unlikely that, if those weapons existed and were moved, the US would not track the weapons all the way to their destination.

The choices now become: A) The weapons never existed; B) The weapons existed but were moved. If A is true then Bush lied. If B is true then Bush lied. Take your pick.

"One way or the other, we are determined to deny Iraq the capacity to develop weapons of mass destruction and the missiles to deliver them.
That is our bottom line."
- President Clinton, Feb. 4, 1998

"If Saddam rejects peace and we have to use force, our purpose is clear. We want to seriously diminish the threat posed by Iraq's weapons of mass destruction program."
- President Clinton, Feb. 17, 1998

"Iraq is a long way from [the USA], but what happens there matters a great deal here. For the risks that the leaders of a rogue state will use nuclear, chemical or biological weapons against us or our allies is the greatest security threat we face."
- Madeline Albright, Feb 18, 1998

"He will use those weapons of mass destruction again, as he has ten times since 1983."
- Sandy Berger, Clinton National Security Adviser, Feb, 18, 1998

"[W]e urge you, after consulting with Congress, and consistent with the U.S.Constitution and laws, to take necessary actions (including, if appropriate, air and missile strikes on suspect Iraqi sites) to respond effectively to the threat posed by Iraq's refusal to end its weapons of mass destruction programs."
- Letter to President Clinton, signed by Sens. Carl Levin,Tom Daschle, John Kerry, and others Oct. 9, 1998

"Saddam Hussein has been engaged in the development of weapons of mass destruction technology which is a threat to countries in the region and he has made a mockery of the weapons inspection process."

- Rep. Nancy Pelosi (D, CA), Dec. 16, 1998

"Hussein has ... chosen to spend his money on building weapons of mass destruction and palaces for his cronies."
- Madeline Albright, Clinton Secretary of State, Nov. 10, 1999

"There is no doubt that ... Saddam Hussein has invigorated his weapons programs. Reports indicate that biological, chemical and nuclear programs continue apace and may be back to pre-Gulf War status. In addition, Saddam continues to redefine delivery systems and is doubtless using the cover of a licit missile program to develop longer-range missiles that will threaten the United States and our allies."
- Letter to President Bush, Signed by Sen. Bob Graham (D, FL,)and others, December 5, 2001

"We begin with the common belief that Saddam Hussein is a tyrant and a threat to the peace and stability of the region. He has ignored the mandated of the United Nations and is building weapons of mass destruction and the means of delivering them."
- Sen. Carl Levin (D, MI), Sept. 19, 2002

"We know that he has stored secret supplies of biological and chemical weapons throughout his country."
- Al Gore, Sept. 23, 2002

"Iraq's search for weapons of mass destruction has proven impossible to deter and we should assume that it will continue for as long as Saddam is in power."
- Al Gore, Sept. 23, 2002

"We have known for! many years that Saddam Hussein is seeking and developing weapons of mass destruction."
- Sen. Ted Kennedy (D, MA), Sept. 27, 2002

"The last UN weapons inspectors left Iraq in October of 1998. We are confident that Saddam Hussein retains some stockpiles of chemical and biological weapons, and that he has since embarked on a crash course to build up his chemical and biological warfare capabilities. Intelligence reports indicate that he is seeking nuclear weapons..."
- Sen. Robert Byrd (D, WV), Oct. 3, 2002

"I will be voting to give the President of the United States the authority to use force-- if necessary-- to disarm Saddam Hussein because I believe that a deadly arsenal of weapons of mass destruction in his hands is a real and grave threat to our security."
- Sen. John F. Kerry (D, MA), Oct. 9, 2002

"There is unmistakable evidence that Saddam Hussein is working aggressively to develop nuclear weapons and will likely have nuclear weapons within the next five years ... We also should remember we have always underestimated the progress Saddam has made in development of weapons of mass destruction."

- Sen. Jay Rockefeller (D, WV), Oct 10, 2002

"He has systematically violated, over the course of the past 11 years, every significant UN resolution that has demanded that he disarm and destroy his chemical and biological weapons, and any nuclear capacity. This he has refused to do"
- Henry Waxman (D, CA), Oct. 10, 2002

"In the four years since the inspectors left, intelligence reports show that Saddam Hussein has worked to rebuild his chemical and biological weapons stock, his missile delivery capability, and his nuclear program. He has also given aid, comfort, and sanctuary to terrorists, including al Qaeda members .. It is clear, however, that if left unchecked, Saddam Hussein will continue to increase his capacity to wage biological and chemical warfare, and will keep trying to develop nuclear weapons."
- Sen. Hillary Clinton (D, NY), Oct 10, 2002

"We are in possession of what I think to be compelling evidence that Saddam Hussein has, and has had for a number of years, a developing capacity for the production and storage of weapons of mass destruction."
- Sen. Bob Graham (D, FL), Dec. 8, 2002

"Without question, we need to disarm Saddam Hussein. He is a brutal,murderous dictator, leading an oppressive regime ... He presents a particularly grievous threat because he is so consistently prone to miscalculation ... And now he is miscalculating America's response to his continued deceit and his consistent grasp for weapons of mass destruction ... So the threat of Saddam Hussein with weapons of mass destruction is real ..."
- Sen. John F. Kerry ! (D, MA), Jan. 23. 2003

Yet, you choose to believe a mere claim from an entity that has been

Hello, Twist

I have discovered the error in your thought process. Notice I left your comment intact about Introductory Science 101.

Just in case you haven't noticed, evolution is being abandoned. I had an argument on a site where one guy was upset that I suggested that PI is not exactly equal to three, despite there being a quotation in the Bible concerning it. Also, the number of foreign students attending U.S. universities is dropping - well, make that plummeting. Seems the U.S. college system is loosing respect in a lot of the world. I can't imagine why. I saw an interesting television program about a well-respected, very kind gentleman who was very religious. I was rather amazed when he stated "American's don't wan't geeks for leaders, we want Rambos". Your comment on U.S. consumption of oil is well taken, but probably ignored by most. I noticed an ad in the newspaper to get your over 6000 lb SUV before the tax break expires.

What I do not understand is why folks cannot fathom why so much of the world is apparently against the United States.

That scares me.

Explain to me the big cuts to the V.A. A lot of vets who fought in Iraq will get a couple of years of free care - then to be dropped and ineligible until their income falls far below $30,000 per year (depending upon the number of dependents). I also believe that to get that free care (I'd have to get out my V.A. package), your total assets plus annual income will have to be under $80,000 per year. My father got cut from the free care. My parent's income is low enough, but the house alone puts them above the cutoff. Unless you are already enrolled in the V.A., you cannot get any care from them until your income drops to those levels.

No, the priority is not to children nor to veterans. My father was in WW2 and I spent 11 months in Vietnam (out of 4 years active duty). Don't tell me what a fantastic job Bush is doing.

Come to think of it, what better day of the year to mention this?

With all due regards from Rochester, NY

Hi Dave!

I tried going to 8KHz and went down to about 6Kbps using the ACELP codec from VoiceAge Corp. It produced that under water quality. When streaming 11 meters, I already have the poor quality of the band to contend with. Adding my own noise was just horrid. Do you have any suggestions on better codecs to use for this? I'd like to get just above adding that noise but not so high that only 5 listeners would choke it up.

I have not tried 16bps. When my friend Bill gets back into town, I'll give it a shot. I live in an apartment building so I can't set up an antenna here. I have to live vicariously via his Antron. (shit... that sounds gay)

Thanks.

Nobody is denying that he had chemical weapons and used them in the past. The question is if he had them at the time Bush claimed. So far there is no evidence to support Bush's claim. On the contrary....

One of the reasons that smaller countries seek such weapons is to defend their country against an overwhelming force -- namely, the US.
Well, unless I'm missing something really fundamental here, the US invasion would have provided the quintessential justification to deploy those weapons. But no such weapons were used. Do you think maybe because no such weapons existed? Or does that make too much sense?

>2) Have you read "Saddam's bombmaker"? This is a book written by the >chief >physicist in the Iraqi nuke program.

Gee, a scientist from Iraq defects to the the US, tells the CIA all kinds of stories, then publishes them in a book. Did you ever stop to think that if his information was so critical to US intelligence, why did the Pentagon allow it to be published? If a nuclear weapons program -did- exist after the first war, why hasn't proof of it been found? And if such proof -was- found, why keep it a secret while permitting the defector's info to be published? That doesn't make any sense.

What -does- make sense it that the defector's 'story' was contrived and published as propoganda to rally public support for aggression against Iraq. After defecting from Iraq, and knowing that Saddam kills returning defectors and their families, he would likely say anything the CIA wanted him to say just for protection. IOW, the source has no validity -regardless- of which side it supports.

>3)If we have such dazzling proof of "lies" by the admninstration, why >doesn't the congress hammer it home and holler for impeachment?

In the continued absense of "dazzling proof" of TRUTH by the administration, it may well come down to impeachment hearings.

>below noted democrats doing? They must just be "mis-speaking", ay?

Misleading the people has been SOP for the administrative branch since

Yep, I found this little gem on the net a thought it fit well.

It is the soldier, not the reporter, who has given us freedom of the press.

It is the soldier, not the poet, who has given us freedom of speech.

It is the soldier, not the campus organizer, who has given us the freedom to demonstrate.

It is the soldier, who salutes the flag, who serves beneath the flag, and whose coffin is draped by the flag, who allows the protester to burn the flag.

He is the cop on the beat who spent six months in Saudi Arabia sweating two gallons a day making sure the armored personnel carriers didn't run out of fuel.

He is the barroom loudmouth, dumber than five wooden planks, whose overgrown frat-boy behavior is outweighed a hundred times in the cosmic scales by four hours of exquisite bravery near the 38th parallel.

She - or he - is the nurse who fought against futility and went to sleep sobbing every night for two solid years in Da Nang.

He is the POW who went away one person and came back another - or didn't come back AT ALL.

He is the Quantico drill instructor that has never seen combat - but has saved countless lives by turning slouchy, no-account rednecks and gang members into Marines, and teaching them to watch each other's backs.

He is the parade - riding Legionnaire who pins on his ribbons and medals with a prosthetic hand.

He is the career quartermaster who watches the ribbons and medals pass him by.

He is the three anonymous heroes in The Tomb Of The Unknowns, whose presence at the Arlington National Cemetery must forever preserve the memory of all the anonymous heroes whose valor dies unrecognized with them on the battlefield or in the ocean's sunless deep.

He is the old guy bagging groceries at the supermarket - palsied now and aggravatingly slow - who helped liberate a Nazi death camp and who wishes all day long that his wife were still alive to hold him when the nightmares come.

He is an ordinary and yet an extraordinary human being a person who offered some of his life's most vital years in the service of his country, and who sacrificed his ambitions so others would not have to sacrifice theirs.

He is a soldier and a savior and a sword against the darkness, and he is nothing more than the finest, greatest testimony on behalf of the finest, greatest nation ever known.

So remember, each time you see someone who has served our country, just lean over and say Thank You. That's all most people need, and in most cases it will mean more than any medals they could have been awarded or were awarded.

Two little words that mean a lot, "THANK YOU".

Support is too strong a word. Let's just say that I understand the reasons why it works and why it is necessary for U.S. based corporate survival in the global economy.

Bush isn't the one who slings mud. His detractors are the ones slinging the mud. It wasn't a republican who accused this president of "Betraying this country" or "Concocting the Iraq war for political gain" or posited that Bush may have known about 9/11 before it happened. There are many more examples if you choose to do a little research. The democrats during this past year have become especially vitriolic in their rhetoric, and their usual ideological differences have given way to pure hatred. The leaders of the democratic party have undergone an almost pure meltdown.

Bush will have a huge task trying to get these people to compromise on anything. Keep your eyes on what happens in the next year. Look closely at who's trying to get things done, and who blocks it at every turn.

It's a shame the kerryoniraq website is gone, as it was plainly obvious by his own words, in his own interviews, that Kerry shifted his position many times during the past 5 years with regard to Iraq.

He was first for taking out Saddam as he felt that Saddam was a "very real" threat, then he was for the war with some reservations. Then when he realized that Howard Dean was getting traction running on an anti-war platform, he shifted again, and admitted that he was an "anti-war" candidate. Then when he became the nominee, he shifted yet again when he stated that he was for continuing the war, but fighting it "smarter" (Smarter meaning anything differently from what Bush had done, based on hindsight).

He HAS flip-flopped on this issue. Anyone who had seen the site and could not come to that conclusion is a hopelessly blinded partisan.

The "Flip-Flop" term would not have stuck to him if there was not enough demonstrative proof to back it up, which there was. I've seen much of it and could not conclude otherwise.

I also find it curious that you've become such an energetic cheerleader for Kerry, and defend his policies so strongly, yet claimed to have voted for Nader.

No one wants to repeal the 1st amendment. That's paranoia speaking Frank.

Kerry ran his campaign based on the numbers. The polls showed that the people were mostly concerned with terrorism with the economy following second. Kerry's handlers decided that the only way Kerry could win is to erode Bush's solid lead on the handling of terrorism. The only chink in that armor was the perception of Iraq. So Kerry attempted to paint it as a systematic failure at each and every turn. Yet, he failed to consider the facts that Saddam was captured and no longer in power. His sons were dead. Most of his followers were also captured.
Any chance of a resumed WMD program was ended.The government was transitioning to Iraq control and elections were planned. The only remaining issue was marginalizing the insurgency.

It's generally considered better tactics to not acknowledge detractors and thereby give them more publicity and credibility. Although that sort of backfired when the Swift boat guys took a chunk out of Kerry's
"sterling" Vietnam record and Kerry initially tried ignoring them.

Your flaw was in assuming there were other companies ready and capable determine, there were none at the time.

Which is common when you retire from a large company and receive your "golden parachute". Cheney's contract was entered into before he took office. He holds no controlling interests any more. He merely receives dividends owed to him under the terms of his former contract.

> It's a conflict of interest and it's illegal.

No, it's not, under the terms that exist. If Cheney were still a current member of the BOD of Halliburton, it would be a conflict of interests. But collecting what basically amounts to stock benefits is not.

It's not all that unusual for executives who run in small political

There was a lot of evidence. Granted it was largely composed of photos from liberated Iraqi scientists. But it evidently was enough evidence to convince several nation's leaders.

Yet, based on this apparent conclusion, you cannot parse how we could not have known the strength of the Iraqi resistance?

If nothing else, this war has proved that we need to do a major house cleaning and revamping of our intelligence agencies. This has already begun to some degree.

But at the time, he believed it was. The failings of our intel

Baghdad. Their ineptitude can also be traced to a gradual but definite decrease in funding over the previous two presidential terms.

You bias is showing again. This is not "Bush's" war, it's another prong in the comprehensive war against terror.

> It failed miserably,

In what way? We signed on over 40 countries to back us in this war.
The biggest holdouts were shown later to have had a financial interest in leaving things as they were. We failed at nothing. We were doomed from the get-go, in the eyes of the French, Germans et al, who were in bed with Saddam.

> but the US public took the bait, hook, line and

It means that we would not be held hostage by the whims of the French et al, when pursuing our national security interests. And later we knew why.

>The US rallied behind his war-cry that the UN was impotent,

The UN has used the U.S. as its enforcement arm since its inception.
Without the U.S., the U.N is little more than a body of paper tigers.
Now that evidence has surfaced which shows corruption in the oil for food program, the integrity of the whole organization is now suspect.

Iraq has played a part in terrorism in the past. They have funded and supported terrorists before. They have provided safe haven for them, and their leader has embraced their goals. Iraq has shown a willingness to be hostile to its neighbors. There was also the big question of Iraqi arms finding their way into terrorist hands.
These were all valid concerns.

Someone lies or distorts the truth then someone else swears to it and that's as good as fact for you Frank? What did you expect them to say? "Yea, well we wanted things done our way, and we wouldn't take no for an answer, and we were fired for it"? This would not be the first time people were fired from top positions for being at odds with the boss, and it certainly won't be the last. Every single person that I've ever known who was fired, failed to take any accountability for it, and instead blamed it on "the boss". "The boss was a dick". "The boss had it in for me". "The boss was rigid". It's always the boss's fault. That's simple human nature.

>>>- The recommended military plan (Sec. of the Army, et.al.) would have

Well yea, there was real concern for the lives of our soldiers. There was also concern that we did not have enough experienced troops to fight in both campaigns (Iraq and Afghanistan). We also tend to rely on our advanced military technology to make lessen the risk to the soldier. The ultimate goal is to reduce the need for ground troops to a bare minimum and limited to "mopping up" operations.

Yet you support the military strategy that requires even more troops then we currently had? Where were we supposed to get them from?

Your boy Kerry has already claimed that we're stretched "too thin" already.

And what kind of dogmatic thinking would reject the use of modern technology and revert to old fashioned warfare tactics, especially considering that this was not a conventional war in any sense of the word?

Was that before he voted for the 87 million or after he voted against it?

Kerry's a real gem. He votes to authorize war, then votes against funding for the soldiers, and then blames the Bush administration for not providing body armor etc. He's a real peach......

How could he be wrong when the war isn't over yet? What actually went "wrong"? We over ran the country in less than a month. It was a strategic success from a military standpoint.

But you make it sound like Rumsfeld fired them AFTER he found out that they were "right" (assuming they really were), which is not the case, as it is too early to review a program, when it's still on-going.

The FACTS are that a couple of generals were fired. What you filled in as the reasons why are pure speculation. The fact that these generals attempted to make their case outside the war planning room is reason enough for their dismissal. Doesn't it stand to reason that people fired from their posts would have motive to throw mud at those who fired them? It's also highly likely that that "mud" will not be entirely accurate.

This is why I largely discredit Richard Clarke. He was demoted from his post, and has harbored sour grapes ever since. What he said in his book is likely to be laced with a liberal dose of embellishment.

>You like to cite Occam's Razor? Now would >be a good time.

Occam's Razor tries to cut through a maze of complicated information and simplify it. If the information is wrong, the simplification of which will be wrong as well.

That's B.S. Many of your so-called "facts" are indeed open for dispute, as the sources for them are of questionable origin.

>Feel free to check each and every one at your own leisure. But don't >tell me anything different because you will just be proving that you >don't practice what you preach -- digging for the FACTS.

I have found the other side of these issues, but I'm not going to bother to post them as you will just discard them as more "Wacko conspiracy sites".

And that is really the closing statement here. You have adopted a particular political viewpoint and will embrace as "fact" any bit of information which bolsters or reenforces your slant, while conversely discarding out of hand, any information which contradicts it.

I am guilty of pretty much the same thing in reverse. The difference is that I am rooting FOR America in its war against those who would see us fall. You, on the other hand, are taking every opportunity to undermine and discredit those who are fighting the battle for reasons which I honestly can't seem to understand.

The number of US students attending US universities is dropping as well.
Bush gets results saying students are dumbed down and are graduating high school with non-sufficient skills, so what does he do? He cuts student aid, permits colleges to raise their tuitions, and raises the intellectual bar for which students must demonstrate proficiency prior to being accepted to a college. He is doing away with grades and replacing them with numbers and a formula which no teacher or educator helped craft. In fact, the teachers are disgusted with his new garbage

I think the majority of the folks DO understand why the majority of the world is against us, they just don't vote. Remember, Bush took no majority of the people, he took the majority of the people registered to vote, and that number, while it may have set some records this year, remains dismal when the total populace is considered.

I've only seen 1 hard drive failure and there are clones that auto switch. Look around, we just sold 4 studio's worth of Scott Studio gear that was only 4 years old. Pennies on the dollar! High end analog consoles are coming around too, we are losing both of our only wheatstones very soon, going to digital. Proprietary replacement parts are hart to find as I beleive they no longer support them, be easy on the faders and you should be fine. All electronic parts such as op-amps, etc. are still in production and quite common. I'll stick with whizzing drives, they are cheap, reliable, and seem to make the most sense to me. But I like my digital consoles :) Where are you located, My boss (cheif engineer) is corporate and we travel all over the US building studios, we may have to meet up for tours, lunch, drinks, and strippers!

I agree that 8Kbps is a bit "muddy" sounding. 16 Kbps is usually better and considering the typically poor fidelity on the CB Band, you really can't tell much of a difference. I use LAME codecs exclusively to make MP3 files from WAV's and it seems to work ok for my use.

The bottom line is bandwidth and I/O speed. Once you hit those limits, there's no more to be had. Have you looked into the WMA format?
Supposedly it offers some streming advantages, although I haven't tried them myself yet.

sophisticated as you've been led to believe.

That, of course, assumes (key word) that our intel capability was as robust as you seem to think. The errors in intel that have become public as of late would seem to suggest otherwise.

Yet, that's exactly what happened. The intel suggested that WMD were there, and yet, we haven't found them yet. There's still a chance that they're still buried in the desert somewhere (Iraq's a big place). But if it's true that the WMD do not exists, then there was a MAJOR disconnect of our intel, and those of other countries who agreed with us.

>The choices now become: A) The weapons never existed; B) The weapons

We knew they did exist at one time. So the question becomes, where did they go? In the 12 years since the gulf war, is it possible that Saddam slowly but surely shipped them out without us knowing? Consdering our evidently faulty intel, it's certainly possible.

How did Bush lie? Especially in scenario "B" where our intel may be lacking.

Repeating bad intel is not the same as lying...

FS: Kenwood TS440 HF Transceiver AllMode
I just got another Kenwood TS-440SAT Receives and transmits fine. I notice if I go to 18 or 21 MHz the frequency readout comes on and then blinks and then only shows dots.
Only on the two bands I mentioned the others are fine,100 percent.
I turned it on later in the day and the 18 and 21 MHz were working fine? No Mic or power cord. I used my power cord and mic.
So I'm selling it as a working transceiver except for the two bands that work and then don't work. The cabinet could use repainting.
ps: I was told it has a built in antenna tuner, But I't didn't work and the person I got it from told me that I should clean all around inside the tuner and said it should work.
Its been sitting a couple of years. But I will sell it as a no ant.

Shame, that. Why are you selling it on a CB group, though? Just curious.

WITH THE FCC: HAM RADIO LICENSING STOPS AND STARTS DUE TO COMPUTER GLICH

Ham radio licensing came to a screeching halt on November 5th. This after a software glitch caused the computer that issues licenses to do some very strange things. Mark Abramovich, NT3V, has been following the developments from Philadelphia and gas more:

The FCC isn't offering any official comment on exactly what happened. But Amateur Radio Newsline has learned that the problems with the Universal Licensing System computer started after an Oct. 28 software upgrade installed by a government contractor.

The problems that followed prompted the FCC to order a five-day shutdown of the system which issues Amateur Radio licenses. The system came back on-line on Nov. 10. However, as of our deadline for this week's program, the FCC still planned a weekend shutdown of the U-L-S for maintenance and expected it to return to operation on Nov. 15.

The American Radio Relay League's Volunteer Examiner Coordinator Bart Jahnke, W9JJ, tells Amateur Radio Newsline he was among the first to detect problems while doing a routine check up on the application of a friend near the end of last month.

Jahnke says he discovered the application was - as he describes it - flagged or marked pending by the FCC for a review by a live person. He says the automated system and its software are set up for minimal human intervention. Jahnke says such a classification immediately raised concerns that something had gone wrong.

Jahnke tells me once he called his contact at the FCC to report the problem, he was told the computer contractor would be notified to investigate.

A couple days later, Jahnke says he was told the problem was fixed. But, as Jahnke tells me, he checked and found that the computer problem had gotten worse. He says he and other VECs were finding the U-L-S had begun issuing Group D call signs - the 2 X 3 ones - to new licensees out of sequence. He says only the first and third call-district applications somehow escaped getting caught up in the problem.

At that point, Jahnke tells Amateur Radio Newsline he and other VECs called the FCC. He says the commission told the contractor to pull the plug on the system on Nov. 5, run some diagnostics and fix it. A message posted on the FCC's website on Nov. 5 said simply: "The granting of Amateur applications has been temporarily suspended. We apologize for the inconvenience."

Prospective hams who had passed VE exams earlier and were awaiting their call sign were getting nervous. Some who received the out-of-sequence call signs were wondering whether the call signs were OK to use. A few had even received a second call sign, cancelling the first. In all, Jahnke says about 130 licensees were affected and thousands of license applications were backed up in the system.

By Nov. 10, Jahnke says the FCC began issuing letters cancelling the out-of-sequence call signs and awarding the proper call signs to new licensees. For some, he says it was their third call sign in a matter of days.

Jahnke says the FCC deserves credit for responding as fast as it did. He also has praise for the other VECs across the country who were in touch the with FCC, too. Jahnke says he's crossing his fingers and hoping the planned weekend maintenance of the FCC U-L-S computer, won't undo the system fix.

For the Amateur Radio Newsline, I'm Mark Abramowicz, NT3V, in Philadelphia.

N6ZE: "The aurora was very bright most of the time and the magnetic bearing from the airplane extended from 300 degress through about 060 or 070. We saw this for about 3 hours and a distance of probably 1900 statute miles."

That's Pete Heins, N6ZE, describing last Sunday night and early Monday's magnificent Aurora from his vantage point in the right seat of a Boeing 757 jetliner. Pete was the co-pilot that night, flying from Los Angeles to New York's J-F-K International airport.

N6ZE: "At no time was the visability obscured by clouds, and for about the last 1 hour of the flight we did have about a 1/4 moon in the Eastern sky climbing, and we were still able to see the AU."

And while Pete was making his way across country, hams on the ground were sitting on 6 meters, 2 meters and all the bands above. And some like Dave Bernhardt, N7DB, in Boring, Oregon were hearing and working stations all over the place. Dave primarily operated 2 meters where according to the V-H-F reflector he worked W7IUV, K7XC, K7GS, WA6KLK and VE7DXG to name only a few. And Dave was not alone.

On the other side of the country, Jeff Klein, K1TEO, in Trumbull, Connecticut reports making Aurora propagation contacts on 2 Meters as far south as Alabama and Tennessee. To the west Jeff worked stations in Missouri, Iowa and Minnesota.

According to reports from NASA, the Auroral opening was caused by a Coronal Mass Ejection or C-M-E on the Sun. That event happened late on Friday, November 5th with the ionized particles reaching our Earth late on Sunday. Television news programs on Monday night showed pictures of this very bright Aurora as far South as Minnesota and northern Kansas.

On Tuesday the 9th two more solar shocks have arrived. Paul Kelly, N1BUG, in Milo, New Hampshire reported them on the VHF Reflector. The first hit just after 09:00 UTC but did not contain favorable magnetic field vectors or strength to produce Aurora at North American mid-latitudes. The second, arriving near 18:20 U-T-C did produce the classic Aurora buzzing. He later describe this event comig just in time for the natural late afternoon peak for auroral backscatter. He says that the Aurora came up fast and suddenly 2 meters filled with strong buzzing signals. He says over the reflector that he worked as far South as grid square E M 66.

And while hams who only operate the high frequency bands were complaining that 80 through 10 meter propagation had literally disappeared, those like N1BUG, N7DB and K1TEO on 6 meters, 2 meters and above were calling C-Q Aurora and making lots of contacts. All that is except Pete Heins, N6ZE, who landed his big silver bird at New York's J-F-K airport just as the sun was coming up. Then again, you have to admit that sitting at 37,000 feet on the flight deck of a 757, Pete probably had the best view of all. (ARNewsline(tm), N6ZE, VHF Reflector)

HELPING HAMS: UNITED WAY REPORTS HUGE HAM RADIO RESPONSE TO ARRL HOLIDAY TOY DRIVE

The United Way in Martin County, Florida, reports "a huge response" by the Amateur Radio community. This, to the ARRL's call to support a toy drive on behalf of the agency's "White Doves Holiday Project."

According to the ARRL Letter, Carol Hodnett, who directs the United Way of Martin County's Volunteer and Community Resource Center says League members from Maine to California have sent toys or money, and more is arriving every day. The League hopes to provide toys for youngsters left homeless or displaced by a string of hurricanes that hit the region earlier this year.

There is still time for you to take part in this very worthwhile project. All you need do is to purchase an unwrapped toy for a boy or girl aged 1 to 14. Please send it prior to Thanksgiving, Thursday, November 25th. Be sure to include a QSL card or 3x5 card displaying your call sign. Mail it to Ham Radio, The United Way White Dove Project, 50 Kindred St, Suite 207, Stuart, FL 34994.

In our view this is Amateur Radio at its very best. Hams helping kids in a true time of need. (ARRL)

ENFORCEMENT: ARE YOU THIS PERSON?

An FCC license holder who is likely a ham is being asked by the agency if he is the same person convicted of a number of criminal acts. And the agency has an important reason for asking. Spokesman Daryl Duckworth, NN0W, explains:

Duckworth: "Regarding qualifications to remain a licensee, in inquiry concerning criminal convictions for theft by deception and theft by failure to make required disposition of funds as the result of an investment scam went to a licensee in Johnstown, Pennsylvania."

According to the FCC release, the person involved is also under investigation by Pennsylvania Administrative Office of the Courts for a possible indecent assault. This is alleged to have been committed on July 30th, 2002.

The purpose of the probe is to determine if the person contacted is the same one as in the alleged and proven criminal cases. For that reason the FCC has withheld the persons identity or any other factual material to indicate whom he or she might be.

But if its the right person, he or she was given two options by the agency. The person can provide additional information on the convictions and charges for consideration by the Commission. Alternately, he or she can voluntarily submit a license for cancellation in order to avoid a hearing on the issue. (FCC, RAIN)

ENFOECEMENT: YOU CAN'T SELL THAT BEACON

Still with enforcement news, word that ACR Electronics, Inc. of Fort Lauderdale, Florida, has been fined $75,000. This, for marketing a personal location beacon to the general public that had not been approved by the Commission.

Now here's the ironic part? The CGC Communicator reports that some of the material submitted to the FCC by ACR helped make the case against the company.

It's all on line at http://hraunfoss.fcc.gov/edocs_public/attachmatch/DOC-253871A1.doc and http://hraunfoss.fcc.gov/edocs_public/attachmatch/FCC-04-259A1.doc (CGC)

ENFORCEMENT: POWER - LESS POWER CAPTAIN

An unlicensed broadcaster's response to an FCC Notice of Violation has helped to clinch a $10,000 fine issued against him. Amateur Radio Newsline's Bill Pasternak, WA6ITF, has the details.

Well, the details really speak for themselves and we would be hard put to say it better than David Michael Oaks. Oaks is the one who received the $10,000 fine for allegedly operating an FM station at his residence in Beaverton, Oregon. This, without the benefit oof holding a valid license to do so.

Quoting from the FCC report and order affirming the fine, the agency says that in responding, Oaks did not deny the charge. Rather, he stated that he was attempting to correct the violation by lowering the power each time he received a notice that he was operating an unlicensed station.

But that's not all. The FCC goes on to say that Oaks asserted that the investigating agent told him that the effective range for a transmitter operating pursuant to Part 15 of the Rules is about 100 feet. Also, that if Oaks chose to do so, he could purchase a Part 15 certified wireless microphone to compare the range of that signal with that of his station.

Oaks did not choose to do so. Nor did he refrain from operating after receiving several written warnings. Based on all of this evidence, the FCC says that the $10,000 fine will stand.

RESCUE RADIO: PROPOSED RADIO JAMMING SYSTEM DROPPED FOR THE MOMENT

Some good news and some bad about an emergency information system proposed by Alert Devices International Corporation. The company has requested that the FCC to dismiss its Petition for Rule Making to create an Emergency Vehicle Signaling Service. This is the previously described service that would allow emergency vehicles to jam out authorized broadcast stations and replace them with emergency warning messages designed to attract the attention of affected motorists.

The good news is that the FCC has granted A-D-I's dismissal request. The bad news is that ADI - according to its latest filing - proposes to submit an "expanded version" of its Petition in the near future. Its all on the web at

MORE POWER CAPTAIN: ELECTRICAL INDUSTRY CHASTISED FOR 2003 BLACKOUT

Those wonderful people that are now bringing you BPL have bigger problems to worry about. This after Federal regulators issue a scathing review of the electricity industry's voluntary efforts to make their power grids more reliable.

The report comes about a year after nation's worst blackout that hit on August 14th of 2003. According to staff at the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, power industry audits play down shortcomings of the grid system, rely on ambiguous standards that often are ignored and reflect vast differences between the best and the worst performers.

But the agency's chairman Pat Wood did say that there have been improvements since the blackout that was caused by power line problems in Ohio and affected eight states from Michigan to New York as well as parts of Canada. (Published reports)

IN PRINT: ALL ABOUT TONE

And with more and more repeaters implementing some form of tone access, it is C-Q Magazine that's taking the lead in explaining how it works to the ham community. In his three page article in the November issue, writer Dave Ingram, K4TWJ, "How It Works" column traces the use of tone access and explains why it can be far more of a friend to hams than a way to keep them off a system they may want to try. You can read what Dave has to say in the November C-Q on newsstands right now. More information is on the web at www.cq-amateur.radio.com (CQ)

Lloyd says that Q-R-Zed currently has openings for two types of volunteers,. These are board Moderators and Callsign Database Administrators. An explanation of the responsibilities of each is on line at the Q-R-Zed site. Its in cyberspace at www.qrz.com. (qrz.com)

Turning to the high tech page, America Online says that it will begin offering members a security device and service that has been used to safeguard business computer networks. This after parent company Time Warner Inc. announces that its AOL unit has signed a deal with Internet security company RSA Security Inc., to launch its new AOL PassCode.

Using an ever changing algorithm, the system is designed to add an additional layer of protection to member accounts. PassCode users will be provided with a small handheld six-digit numeric code key which refresh on the device every 60 seconds. To log onto an AOL account equipped with the service, users will have to type in the six-digits in addition to their regular password.

The price of the code-key device will be $9.95. Service costs will range from $1.95 to $4.95 per month. This, in addition to the usual America Online subscription fee. (AOL, published reports)

EMERGING TECHNOLOGY: FALSING CALLER ID

The Washington Post reports that a new technology can trick U.S. caller-ID services into displaying someone else's name and telephone number. The Web-based systems make the name and number appear in a call recipient's caller-ID box.

A company called Star38 that launched in September with plans to market to debt collectors has changed its strategy after consumers complained. Star38 admitted the approach was "flawed," and now says it will market their system to law enforcement agencies.

New Jersey-based Camophone says it will perform the service on a call-by-call basis for a fee of $5 and up. The company said it recognizes that the service could be abused but insists its intent is to help customers protect their privacy.

But consumers worry that the technology could be used by stalkers and debt-collection agencies, some consumers worry. The Direct Marketing Association said masking a marketer's identity is illegal under rules enforced by the Federal Trade Commission and the Federal Communications Commission. (Washington Post)

WORLDBEAT - UK: FINAL G5RV LOGBOOK RETRIEVED FROM EBAY

Meantime, word from the United Kingdom that the final log book of one of the worlds best-known radio amateurs has been saved for posterity. This, after it was put up for auction on eBay.

The late Louis Varney, G5RV, of G5RV antenna fame was one of the founding members of the Chelmsford Amateur Radio Society in 1936. So when Chelmsford club member Duncan Munro, M0KGK spotted that G5RV's last ever logbook was being auctioned, the club decided to buy it.

Munro did the bidding. Despite fierce competition he managed to secure the logbook in the last eight seconds of auction.

The logbook shows that G5RV's final QSO's took place on the 11th January 2000 and were , appropriately enough recorded on page 73 of the logbook. The stations contacted were Ron Glover, G0WGP, in West

Sussix and club President Harry Heap, G5HF, in Chelmsford. Louis was, of course, using his famed G5RV antenna for all of the contacts. (GB2RS)

THAT FINAL ITEM: UK HAMS ON THE AIR WITH EXPANDED 40 METER PRIVELEGES

And finally this week, hams in the U-K have taken to the airwaves with their recently expanded privileges. RSGB Newsreader Jeramy Boot, G4NJH, is where it all took place:

UK radio amateurs gained access to new frequencies between 7.1 and 7.2MHz from 31st October.
After dark, the band between 7.1 and 7.2MHz is still full of powerful broadcast stations, although some clear frequencies can be found.

The band became available on the second day of the CQ World Wide DX Phone Contest. Many UK stations took advantage of the new band by making contest QSOs with stations in the USA on their own frequency, instead of having to work 'split' as had been the case when contacting North America on 40 metres SSB.

During the daytime, numerous UK stations are now able to have virtually interference-free inter-G contacts above 7.1mhz.

The new band is available to radio amateurs on a Secondary, non-interference, basis until 2009. After the end of March 2009, the broadcast stations should move to other frequencies and 7.1 to 7.2MHz will then become an amateur Primary band.

Jeremy Boot, G4NJH, in Nottingham.

Amateurs in the Republic of Ireland were also granted access to 7.1 to 7.2 MHz towards the end of October, joining those in Croatia, Norway and San Marino who already had access to these frequencies. Hams in Switzerland will also gain access to 7.1 to 7.2MHz from 1st January 2005. (GB2RS)

Yeah, I use lame to make MP3's too. I think it's great.

For the last few tests we have been using WME with WMA codecs. It works really well. There are several advantages to it but a few disadvantages as well. I'm going to post the instructions and see what others come up with.

What are you gonna want for them? Not saying I'm in the market for one but it's nice to know if it gets brought up. I'm sure you won't have them for long if they're selling for cheap.

Try telling that to the monkeys operating them. :-| I've gotten mixers back

Anybody know what new Westinghouse 6LQ6 tubes go for these days?
I have six of them.

I used to use them in a Firebird 500 amp but got out of the CB stuff years ago.
The Firebird still works and has a couple of them in it as well.
No, I won't sell the Firebird, even tho I would like to. It is illegal to sell according to FCC rules.

I have seen the addition of these"ground planes" result in a lower on mirror mounted antennas. I believe that is primarily what they were designed. The improvement may have made some measurable improvement in transmit or receive capabilities of a radio but I doubt if it was anything you could hear.

Certified letter is going Monday to Yahoo about that Alfa-Tango group and web page on Geocities. Will explain to Yahoo how illegal radio operators can interfere with 1st responders in emergencies, etc. The others will be dealt with through the FCC. We should see more keyclown sites giving up the ghost pretty soon.
Ya see, dummies...all you can do is pound your keyboards with frustrated insults and vapid retorts. AKC can and does slap down illegal keyclowns daily.
If you dont think so, post an auction on ebay and let us know about it here...see how long it lasts if it is for illegal stuff.
It is rapidly approaching the holiday season, and the AKC aims to make this a fun time for all legal CB'ers by stopping the activities that give all you off topic kneepadded sissies your jollies.

You can jabber, you just can't do anything BUT jabber....must suck for you!

More 3rd hand web bullcrap. Let's see YOU cite the articles, and show

Carter told the biggest lie of all in the run up to the '76 election..."I will never lie to you."

The limpwristed twit sat there with his weenie in his hand praying that the Ayatollah wouldn't break in and cut it off during the whole last half of his presidency.

Newsreaders tend to sort by the time the message was typed rather than posting time as given by the NNTP server.
Generally, I go through posts just before sending them. That time I did not post them immediately, so it showed a difference between the creation and posting time stamps.

I suppose we could start a debate on which time stamp news readers should sort by :~)

Like the magnetic water and fuel economy devices?
Those who fall for such cons are probably so keen to believe something that they will believe they see some effect when there is nothing to see.

Have you ever seen David Blaine, where he levitates? When asked, some people say they saw him lift feet from the ground. These people may not be stooges and may well believe their story but two or three inches is more realistic. However, having purposly asked people "how high" and found someone believing they saw him rise several feet, they were in a position to use that clip to back up the specially edited version on shown TV and video.

It is well known that "witnesses" can often give strange reports. Just as David Blaine would have picked out the best responses to show on TV, dodgy dealers will pick out the best stories as "proof" of their claims...
they may even add new claims to match the wild stories from some people.

If you can get an "expert" to think they see something happen, then even more people will be willing to believe it. If they find out the truth and complain, you simply tell them that "experts" have proved their claims...
you must be using it wrong.

Peter

Does the KLV-550 transmit on 11 meters? If so you are a law breaker simply by having it.

The "Galaxy Echo/Roger beep base mic " may also be illegal. Any noises

3KW Roller Inductor, ok for a driver I guess, it would work, if you throttled the driver back a few KW. Ok for a mobile but never for a base.

Yes it was vetoed because it was for crap that was totally ineffective for doing what it was suppose to do. At best it would have added the same level of security that airports have now, which is next to nothing for someone who wants to do some real damage.Especially for someone who is willing to sacrifice their own life to kill others.This was millions for extra security that wasnt worth a dime..

"A secure and efficient border is key to our economic security." - Bush, 9/9/02

While Bush did hold a photo-op to sign legislation promising more INS/Border Patrol staff and facilities, his budget provided no additional money for this. Additionally, in August of 2004, Bush vetoed $6.25M for promised pay upgrades for Border Patrol agents. Additionally, he vetoed ALL $39 million for the Container Security Initiative. His 2004 Budget slashed total "Border and Transportation Security" by $284 million.

Stay with me, Dave, don't go invoking and introducing subjects and asking me about their origin in order to deflect acknowledging this Bush lie/flip-flop, whatever term you choose to semantically apply.

> Has Bush indeed refused to veto any

>spending package, or are the above claims

Well, Dave, IF you would have read his budget, you would not have to ask, considering you claimed you keep yourself well informed of his matters. Again, this illustrates you have not. The facts of this case, are there, and cut and dry. You can cry about what definition you apply to "fact" all day. It won't change what took place or the matter that you are unaware of it and thus, deny it.

(shrug) You can choose to believe either A) what took place, B) that Bush never claimed he was increasing border patrol, or C) Claim he DIDN'T veto 39 million for the border patrol. illustratig once again, you need to read what it is this president is doing, as you clearly indicate you havent the foggiest.

>In either case, someone has lied on the other >side of the fence.

Bush is the only party here. He made the claim in 2002, and he plucked money from the budget for the border patrol this summer. It's justifiably understandable you do not concern yourself with the border issues in Pa., but Dave, this is the unadulterated truth. Truth sometimes hurt, Dave, especially when you come to realize,,,you were wrong.

>Some solid sources would certainly make the >case a bit clearer.

Yea,,those bills this information was gleened from,,tsk tsk,,,,useless reading.
Try googling "Container Security Initiative".

Why is it the keyclowns can't/won't address the core issue? The issue is the law breakers who try to ruin this fine group. We demand a stop to the posts concerning radios that break federal law. They may be more suited to the pirate radio grouos. Or maybe a new group that deals with federal law breakers. The keyclowns as well as the dealers of contraband would have a home.

Here's another thing. Why does it seem that the keyclowns always want to fight or beat up people who disagree with them? I just don't understand. Even if the FCC finally catches all of them they're still going to be posting off topic things on the internet. The best option is they're own group. That still doesn't keep them off the citizen band with radios meant for amateur radio. Of course most of those radios were not ever intended for amateur use. No true CB operator wants all that echo stuff much less an amateur operator using it.

The bottom line is talk about 11 meter amps and non type accepted 11 meter transmitters do not belong here. This is a group for citizen band radio operators and those interested in the proper operation of the above. One day the keyclowns will be caught and dealt with. When they're caught they'll be much gnashing of the teeth in the trailer parks across America. Make no mistake, you violators WILL BE CAUGHT. You are NOT "freebanders"! You are common thugs, no more than that.

There is time to change. Respect your government. Respect the FCC. Most of all, learn to respect yourselves.

We like making people lose ISP's by ratting them out. A couple years

You should know. You know all about making noise for your own

In the week ending Oct. 17, there were 23 American soldiers killed in Iraq. I saw no prominent mention anywhere. If there were 23 policemen killed in New York in a week, the city would shut down. If there were 23 police officers killed in the nation in a week, it would be a national calamity.

But the 23 dead American soldiers went virtually unmentioned. I watch the "Today" show and they say that now we are going to see all the good things happening in Iraq. Insanity.

least half the folks are against Bush, but not neccessarily for Kerry, something that confuses the hell out of the radicals of the right Continuing to incorrectly associate all those who voted against Bush with that of being a Kerry supporter is your right. But, permit me a response to this cool 'toon........it would seem to me some of these

a regular and frequent basis.

And therein is the danger in what Bush has successfully done to citizens of this country...he has successfully skewered many folks otherwise sound judgement, like above. Neither party is RIGHT, Dave, as in "right or wrong", and it's folks like you that continue to foster hate, discontent, and division among this country by insisting party affiliation somehow makes one either right or wrong. Not in this great country,,,at least, not yet, but people like you espousing the bullshit as you did above present a venerable challenge to freedom lovers, as you disguise your hate by wrapping yourself in the flag and attacking others, all the while, calling yourself a patriot. Those who voted against Bush are not all liberals, nor is the majority of democrats extreme left, Pigeonholing all who oppose Bush as "libs" is simply another manner of dumbing down concepts by the Bush admin.

>I guess that's what happens when you live

That's exactly what happens when art of the flock like yourself succumb to the BUllSHit.
On June 25, 2001 (Page 58 of the (911 Report) tells us Richard Clarke personally "warned Rice and Hadley that SIX separate intelligence reports showed Al Qaeda personnel warning of a pending atack." It goes on to detail how Arabic television reported that Bin Laden's pleasure with Al Qaeda leaders was because of the televised reports that the next weeks will witness important surprises and that US interests WILL be targeted.

On June 30, 2001, the headline of the briefing to the president was "Bin Ladin planning high profile attacks."
Page 60 of the 911 Report by the Commisoners tell the world in plain language what we already know, yet the Bush administration not only fails to comprehend, but continues to deny and point blame to others. "We do not believe (our) leaders understood the gravity of this threat". The paragraph goes on to explain how Clarke, as late as September 4, 2001, publicly complained that the White House had not yet made up its mind on whether Al Qaeda was a serious threat".

>Personally, I'm for accommodating all those >lunatic leftists who are now threatening to >leave the country. I say, don't let the border hit >you on the ass on the way out....

Me too. All the intelligent leftists and true liberals (not those you mistakenly apply the Bush definition of "liberal") are staying right here and will continue to slay the bullshit of those who seek to put others down because of their political views or affiliations and seek to weaken this nation's resolve with fear-mongering. Those who clamor to leave the country are about as credible as those of you who call all who oppose Bush "libs" and claim all other political views except the one which you hold are "wrong",,,,,in other words,,,not at all credible. God bless America, where everyone has the right to engage the political party of their choice without prejudice,,,,except by fascists not unlike yourself.

>Dave

>"Sandbagger"

Page 71 of the 911 Report explains Al Qaeda represents an ideological movement and NOT a a finite group of people. Bush shows he has no grasp of this with his claiming of victory each time he entrenches another physical area of ground in Iraq. Page 88 finds "The enemy goes beyond Al Qaeda to include the radical ideological movement inspired in PART by Al Qaeda". Eliminating Al Qaeda will equal the ridding of a name only.
Page 88 explains "An attack is probably coming; it may be more devastating still."
Page 89 shows among the commission's findings and recommendations to protect this country from future acts of terrorism, is for the President to "Confront problems with Saudi Arabia in the open and build a relationship beyond oil."
The Bush regime is a failure.

It's what I said all along. The Bush regime has always seeked to silent opposition or views they do not agree. It doesn't matter what group the rabid right is attacking,,.it's chilling, as those who stand by and say or do nothing will find no one left to defend or speak on their behalf when the fascist regime comes after them and they are all that is left. Interesting is page 88 of the 911 Report that tells us what MUSt be done to protect the US. Among their findings, is that the mandatory use of ALL national power is a dire necessito to success...Dilpomacy (Bush failed), Intelligence (Bush failed), Covert Action (Bush failed..Tora Bora), Law Enforcement, Economic Policy (Bush failed), Foreign Aid (Bush failed,,he renigued on many promises of foreign aid to many countries,,,most recenty, Rwanda) and Homeland Defense (Bush failed,,not only were we hit with 911, we were hit with anthrax attacks after 911)

I haven't heard any DNC leaders make the accusations you claim. Got a knowledge of the attacks of 9/11 beforehand.

It's a bipartisan government. What do you expect? Just how exactly do Websites disappear. Facts don't. The facts are a matter of public record, and you don't need some fly-by-night website to interpret the facts for you, do you? Watch the Frontline program I cited before. It presents video of Kerry himself expressing his positions on many different occasions going all the way back to his Vietnam testimony.

And whether or not you believe Frontline put a spin on the piece (which is nothing more than speculation on your part since you didn't even see it), the facts presented are still facts.

>He was first for taking out Saddam as he felt that Saddam was a "very

That's not a change in position. He has always maintained that Saddam was a "very real" threat, even in the debates. What he also said, and what he has said from the beginning (even before the 1st war) was that war should be used as a last resort..... and I'm starting to repeat myself. Is there some other language that you understand better than English?

That's not a shift at all. The fact is that we are in the war (thanks to Bush) and there is no way out but to win it. But Bush & Rumsfeld are doing a totally imcompetent job of running the war. It wouldn't make any sense to run it the same way. And in case you haven't noticed, Bush has changed tactics since the election, which (in my view) is a clear admission that Bush fucked up. The fact is that Bush has shifted -his- position since the election, the very same crime he accused of Kerry -before- the election. What a hypocrite.

>The "Flip-Flop" term would not have stuck to him if there was not >enough demonstrative proof to back it up, which there was. I've seen >much of it and could not conclude otherwise.

That's an assumption based on a logical fallacy. Maybe you forgot about the rrcb campaign to declare me N7VCF. Well, despite all the years of claims that I am he (or any other ham), I'm not. I call that "truth by repitition", and it doesn't work because no matter how many times you make the claim, the facts don't change. I'm not N7VCF, and

I'm not a ham.

You shouldn't be fooled by word-mongers who use catch phrases and euphamisms to influence public opinion. Like, for example, the so-called "death tax". Well, it used to be called the "estate tax" until someone hired a 'consultant' to come up with a term that the public will embrace. There are lots of examples of this, not the least of which is the "Patriot Act" -- a 'patriotic' name for some really bad legislation, and the public fell for it.

Same thing with "flip-flop". That's a derogative term for Kerry's changes in position, but in total disregard for the fact that those changes were done in response to changing circumstances which, IMHO, demonstrates Kerry's ability to recognize and assess new facts and information. Bush just wanted you to hear the term "flip-flop", which is why he used it so many times.

The -real- problem is that these tactics work. The US is in bad shape when people base their decisions using 80% emotion and 20% intellect.

>I also find it curious that you've become such an energetic
>cheerleader for Kerry, and defend his policies so strongly, yet >claimed to have voted for Nader.
>Something doesn't smell right Frank.

That's because your sniffer is set for Bush. I have stated before that I didn't think Kerry was a strong enough leader to be president. He doesn't have the connections, his communication skills aren't quite up to snuff (but not as bad as Bush), and he doesn't command a presence in Congress (which would be necessary for a president, especially if his party doesn't hold the majority). However, I -do- think he is more honest than most politicians and that his intentions are genuine and sincere.

And as I stated before, I voted for Nader because he was the best candidate that didn't belong to the 2-party cartel. I'm tired of all the partisan bickering, which consumes most of the time of Congress and is responsible for the stagnant, status-quo attitude of our present government (i.e, nothing changes bad -or- good). What I think is needed is for -neither- side to hold a majority, or even a near majority. Actually, I think political parties should be illegal. But that's not going to happen, at least not in my lifetime.

And you continue to ignore the fact that the US doesn't go around the world kicking out brutal dictators. Saddam was an exception. Maybe for oil, maybe to finish the job started by his daddy, or maybe for a big Halliburton contract. Maybe all three. But the facts remain -- there are plenty of brutal dictators to go around, the US ignores most of them, has supported many of them, and overthrows very, very few. And as for your claim of Saddam being an "imminent threat", something even Bush denied, you continue to ignore the fact that there were no WMDs.

> His sons were dead. Most of his followers were also captured.
>Any chance of a resumed WMD program was ended.

That argument is bogus. The WMD program wasn't going to be restarted anyway. The sanctions weren't going to be lifted anytime soon, or at least not while Saddam (or his sons) were in power. And his cash-cow from the oil-for-food fiasco would have soon run out since the scandal was detected and under investigation even -before- the invasion.

>The government was

LOL!!! That's absolutely ridiculous! There's hardly a civilian left in Falluja, fighting is still breaking out in Bagdad and most other major cities, and in the outlying regions there is little if any presence by US or Iraqi security. Yet Bush claims that safe and secure elections could be held there TODAY??? If you believe that then you don't have a very good grip on reality.

Still just speculation, but Jordan has had long-time partnerships with Iraq in year past, and the populations of the countries have close ties. Even though the Jordanian government has positive relations with the US, the people are predominantly pro-Palistinian, and therefore would likely offer aid to an enemy of the US. Syria, OTOH, has a much

Because the only intelligence you and I know about (at this time) is what the administration has presented publically, but the likelyhood that we had a 100% intelligence failure is nil. Mind you that this is the same intelligence that, before the invasion, tracked Saddam into one of his hideouts and missed him by less than an hour. It also tracked Saddam from one location to the next, usually missing him by a matter of minutes. His sons and henchmen were also located and tracked, and were also narrowly missed several times. But for some reason they couldn't find those damned WMDs even AFTER the war. The found Saddam, killed his sons, killed or captured almost all of his henchmen, but -=STILL=- can't find those WMDs.

Open your eyes, Dave -- the only conclusion is that the 'intelligence' regarding WMDs was fabricated. That's not only the simplest conclusion (citing your Occam's Razor), but the most logical when considered in context with the circumstances surrounding Bush's admin; his personal ties to oil, the failed ousting by his father, Cheney's connections with Halliburton, Rumsfeld's connections with Cheney, and the FACT that NOT EVEN A TRACE of those WMDs was found after the war. If you have a different conclusion then I'm perfectly willing to hear it, but you need to have the facts to back it up like I do. And those better be some mighty compelling facts because the facts I listed are pretty compelling to begin with.

Not just "what we know now", but what we know now about what -they- knew -then-. A 100% intelligence failure.... no, let's say just a 99% intelligence failure with regards to WMDs, while at the same time the intelligence was 99% accurate about everything else. That kind of scenario doesn't even happen in the movies. It's not plausible even in fiction. And they aren't even claiming they were "overwhelmed with information and couldn't put it all together" as they did with 9/11. They are saying flat-out that they were wrong.

Think about this, Dave: You are watching the news and they put on a story about two parents who were in 'shock and awe' upon hearing that their 'son' is pregnant. The parents claim that they thought their child was a male from the time it was born. They changed the childs diaper, they bathed 'him', they dressed 'him', and they watched 'him' grow up through puberty, and all the time they thought 'she' was a 'he'. Now, barring the kid being a hermaphrodite, would you believe the parents are telling the truth? Of course not, and no person in their right mind would.

>> When

> The failings of our intel >agencies became glaringly apparent, but only after we had taken >Baghdad. Their ineptitude can also be traced to a gradual but definite

Let's assume that what you are saying is true (and it may be true, I don't know). But even if funding was reduced, the technology has grown by leaps and bounds which could easily have compensated for the reduction. There is also the fact that the SR-71 was shelved, U2 flights are becoming redundant with the improved satellites and drones, and EM surveillance has been expanded relieving the need for bugs and wiretaps. There could be plenty of reasons why funding was reduced, but that doesn't mean efficiency follows the dollar sign. IOW, throwing more money at an agency doesn't necessarily mean it's going to do a better job. In some cases it's just the opposite. If you have some facts to back up your.... oh, just forget it.

Another fun phrase, "America held hostage" by the French and Germans.
Just because they didn't accept Bush's lame excuse to go to war, all of a sudden the French and Germans are holding us hostage.... now just WHAT is the logic behind THAT? It doesn't make any sense at all! What makes you think that the French or German government would take an active part in the violation of our national security? They wouldn't, not if they are responsible citizens of the world community. And that's what they are. So the issue COULD NOT have been about our national security. No, the issue was about financial and business interests -- OUR financial and business interests, which happened to conflict with -their- finanacial and business interests.

Geez, Dave, can't you see things for what they are and not the way you are told to see them by the press or the Bush admin?

No. I trust the truth and accuracy of the facts which are presented that can't be altered. Like taped press conferences, public records, personal interviews, and (of course) logic. Facts can be removed from the bias, but only if you are capable of thinking logically. You,

Dave, you don't have a clue about what I'm talking about so quit pretending you do. MacGregor's plan was solicited by Rumsfeld because it fit in with Rumsfeld's idea of a smaller, hi-tech military. He was never 'hired' by Rumsfeld so he was never fired.

That's Rumsfeld's ideology, but as you can now see it doesn't always work. That's what the Pentagon generals tried to tell him ahead of time. You need the right tool for the job -- plastic knives are great for picnics, but they don't do a very good job at chopping down a

First off, we shouldn't have been there at all. Second, there was plenty of time to prepare for an increase in troops. Third, if the war had been justified in the eyes of the public, there would have been plenty of volunteers and little resistance to a draft, if needed.

Kerry is not "my boy", but he was right. A draft may be unavoidable.

Nobody suggested abandoning modern technology. And even there is no longer any such thing as a "conventional war", many of those "old fashioned" warfare tactics are still valid, useful, and are required teaching at the military acadamies ("those who do not learn from history are destined to repeat it"). The point is that the troops are necessary, but can be augmented with modern technology to improve both their effectiveness and their odds of survival. This fact is being proven in the recent fighting in Falluja (which, by the way, is using one of those "old fashioned" warfare tactics you condemn, and is being fought the way the war should have been fought at the beginning).

They took the country but they can't keep the peace -- the occupation is one step short of a complete disaster. Despite our presence and Iraq's token government, nobody has been "in charge" of that country for over a year. If there was then we wouldn't be fighting in Falluja (with more cities to come in the near future).

>But you make it sound like Rumsfeld fired them AFTER he found out that >they were "right" (assuming they really were), which is not the case,
>as it is too early to review a program, when it's still on-going.

You missed something here: Rumsfeld fired them because they dissed him in front of a public congressional committee. Rumsfeld was a wrestler in school -- but that does not give him the education or experience to run a war. If anyone thinks any different then they keep their mouth shut or get fired. That's messed up. No, that's not just messed up, that's borderline dictatorship.

>The FACTS are that a couple of generals were fired. What you filled in
>as the reasons why are pure speculation. The fact that these generals >attempted to make their case outside the war planning room is reason >enough for their dismissal.

Wrong. That congressional committee was THE place for them to voice their disagreements, ESPECIALLY when Rumsfeld had no respect for their education or experience in the matter and ignored their professional opinions.

> Doesn't it stand to reason that people >fired from their posts would have motive to throw mud at those who

>entirely accurate.

Motive, yes. Likely, not necessarily. From one perspective you might call them whistle-blowers. From another you might say they are simply throwing back the mud that was thrown on them. What I saw was none of the above: it was a press conference to discuss the current state of the US military and operations in Iraq. The fact is that MacGregor and Shinseki frequently held different points of view, as did the others present at the conference. Regardless of their motives, common or not, the consensus was that fundamental military principles were cast aside by Rumsfeld in favor of his own 'modern military' ideology, that the application of those principles is/was necessary for success in Iraq, and that the failures in Iraq can be attributed, for the most part, to Rumsfeld's incompetence. Now in my opinion, those things needed to be said because there are two sides to every story, and up until that time only Rumsfeld's story had been heard.

Spin it anyway you want, but on one side you have several professional soldiers with a combined education and experience of over 200 years and many wars; in the other corner is a lifer politician who wrestled in college. Now if your son is off fighting in Iraq, who do -you- want running the war?

The facts I stated as facts and the opinions I stated as opinions. The facts you can verify at ANY time, yet you just sit there and blast away calling them "conjecture" without even checking -- good God, Dave, do you have any idea how stupid that makes you look? If I was to say that Bush was busted for DUI are you going to blow that off as "conjecture", too? I hope not because it's a fact! You -can- tell the difference, can't you? And I'm asking that seriously because I'm not so sure that you have a working comprehension of the word 'fact'.

Oh that's just a pile of bullshit, Dave! You sound like Bill O'Rielly who thinks that anyone who criticizes the US is a friggin terrorist! I've put my ass on the line for my country, which is something you obviously haven't done. I took an oath to "protect and defend the Constitution from all enemies foreign and domestic", and I still hold myself to that oath. I have a faith in the system that even Twisty doesn't recognize, and I may be naive but I believe this country will eventually repair itself from the damage done by the Reagan/Bush/Bush regime, although it may take some time and a lot of work. And unlike you, I look towards the future, not pacified in the present by slick feel-good catch phrases and a payola check for my vote. I think for myself -- I don't allow myself to respond to snappy campaign slogans and you won't find me spewing their rhetoric without a logical reason. If you prefer to be led around on a leash then that's your business, but honestly I thought you were smarter than that. You ARE smarter than that. Why the hell don't you use your smarts instead of letting everyone push your buttons? Do you like having your buttons pushed or are you just too lazy to think? Does it feel good to let someone else control your mind?

Come on, Dave, think. Before you start tapping out a reply to this, check a few of the facts I cited. You will see that I'm not lying about this stuff. You can form your own conclusions, and that's fine, but at least CHECK THE FACTS!!!

The gathering technology is clearly the best available. The problem is putting together the overwhelming amount of information from those many sources. Otherwise, 9/11 may have been prevented. But that was a case where few expected such an attack (and the one's who did were considered 'paranoid'), and the specific nature and target[s] of the attack were not known. OTOH, the Bush admin claimed to be "solidly convinced" of both the existence and whereabouts of Iraq's WMDs. Either Bush is -really- gullible or he lied.

Or Bush lied. Again, if you want to cite Occam's Razor, pick the most likely scenario:

1) Saddam, dictator of a country that was under constant surveillance and with two-thirds of it's airspace controlled by the US, was able to manufacture and conceal WMDs -so well- that, despite the efforts of the intelligence agencies of at least three major countries, those weapons -still- have not been found; or

2) Bush, oilman and son of the president who first waged war against Saddam, lied about the intelligence in order to raise domestic and international support for a second war. And don't forget the fact Bush was caught red-handed in at least one lie about the intelligence -- he pushed on the public the unconfirmed report that Saddam was trying to secure nuclear material from Africa, despite warnings from the CIA that the information may not be accurate.

>>The choices now become: A) The weapons never existed; B) The weapons

The excuse that the intelligence was bad just doesn't wash. And it's also a very convenient excuse since the US public will never be privy to that intelligence.

Hello, Twist

Flip-flop or no, I see everything just rosy in Iraq these days. Did you notice that the American dollar is falling against the Euro? Also that it is falling against a lot of currencies (except for some Far Eastern nations and China. China has pegged their currency against the dollar - which should keep the manufacturing in China).

I remember the right wing saying they were improving things by making manufactured goods more affordable. Sure, until the deficit starts affecting our currency - oh, it already is ;)

As to boarder patrols, I believe a lot of funds went to the mid-west states. Guess the states bordering on ocean just have to make do. Oh, I forgot; many of the states on the ocean were the "blue" states.

Well, it was in the paper this morning. Unemployment in Rochester is around 9%. That doesn't count a lot of folks like me who got whacked from Kodak. As long as you receive severance pay and it is more than unemployment will pay, you aren't unemployed. That, plus the fact that they didn't extend the unemployment benefits keeps a rosy color to the total picture - except that unemployment here is still 9% despite efforts to reduce that. Perhaps they should cut unemployment benefits to 6 weeks. That will improve the unemployment picture :))

Time to switch to more pleasant subjects. At least our weather here in Rochester, NY is nice. Mid 50s today and sunny. How's the skip?

Best regards from Rochester, NY
Jim

Hello Steveo:

Man that reminds me, the mudduck mobile we fixed just the other day.

What a mess.

The 250 amp Leach Naville Alternators only had one V belt driving them when it had room for two V belts. New Gates Belts where installed. Along with Mobile 1 Oil, for the high and long key down reveess!

The wiring was as poor as it gets too. We replaced the charpie 10 gauge wire with, with New Neoprene Multi Strand welding cable 4 gauge, from the alternator to the transformers.

Taking out the old RG393 and replacing it with 7/8 inch Heliax Coax, was also a wise choice. We installed new LC Type connectors, and shit canned the PL-259 / SO 259 connectors.

The antennas where modified with heavier tubing, and top hats, where added to keep the tips of the antennas from burning off, wooo wee what a stink!

The 10K Slug in the Bird Wattmeter, says it all being sent to the corner hard.....

Now we be dropping the Maul and gettin them ALL!

At 7:32p Eastern, something went bad at the audio input cable. Sound went funky and Bill checked to determine if it's in fact a bad wire. It looks like it is. Took it off line. I'll go over there tmrw to see what happend.

I performed the mod as shown there but I can twist the Channel knob until I wear it out and it still only works on the Normal channels. I hate to get

Ok, you may be right, but it does appear to be human DNA...a very poor

Thanks for your support Sheeople

Now that the president has been reelected by people whom have had the wool pulled over their eyes, hang on. It's going to be a rough ride.

The plans have already been laid to reinstate the draft. Don't believe me? Google these two words: (1) Bush, and (2) Draft. You will be shocked. It does not bode well for your friends, loved ones, and co-workers. The facts were there, but were effectively hidden by the GOP. And to boot, think your acquaintances will be safe by being in college or leaving the country? Not so, that's there too. Education will not be a reason to avoid the draft, and extradition treaties have been upgraded to make sure no country is a safe haven for draft dodgers. And unlike Bush, you can't enlist in the Guard to keep safe either.

Cost of the war? To date, the cost is over $143,000,000,000. That's billions folks. Remember the tax refund check you got? Well, hope you didn't spend it; you'll need that and a lot more to pay for Bush's little game.

War on terror? Ha! Now that IS funny! Now think back to 9/11. Who flew those planes into the towers? I don't believe it was Saddam, or any Iraqi, was it? It WAS Saudi Arabians and a few other nationalities. Have we taken those countries to task? Why are we in Iraq?

Afghanistan and the Taliban? What happened there? Well, we dropped a few bombs and then we ran off to Iraq, whom we promptly attacked. Why? Does the word "oil" ring a bell? And let's see...where did the Bush clan make its money? Purely coincidence, I'm sure. The argument that we were liberating an oppressed people does not hold water, as there are many other countries that are ruled by unfair heads of state. But then again, they are not sitting atop a lake of oil.

Now then, what can you do? Well, I suggest you write your congressman, your senator, and even the president to inform them that you want us to exit Iraq. This applies whether you voted for Bush or Kerry. We cannot sustain this war financially, morally, or physically. If you believe otherwise, please do yourself a favor and pull your head out of the sand. The facts do not lie.

This should really piss you off:

BTW Dave, several of these are very credible sources, and are not DNC puppets. Now then, tell us again why this war was justified? Oh, and while your at it, post something that can be verified.

In the week ending Oct. 17, there were 23 American soldiers killed in Iraq. I saw no prominent mention anywhere. If there were 23 policemen killed in New York in a week, the city would shut down. If there were 23 police officers killed in the nation in a week, it would be a national calamity.

But the 23 dead American soldiers went virtually unmentioned. I watch the "Today" show and they say that now we are going to see all the good things happening in Iraq. Insanity.

AKC announces it because keyclowns should know who smacks them down. I further aggravates them because they have no recourse. If this was alt.allegal.drugs we would be laughing just as hard!

Keyclowns exist for the pleasure of the AKC, so wake up and get a Illegal to modify CB radios to work out of band. Guess we are gonna have to send another letter to Yahoo and tell them about the unsavory content of that group. You keykweenz can slobber all you want about how information is legal, etc. Who cares? When Yahoo gets the picture as to what you are doing with the space they give you they will yank your group, which is also perfectly legal.

Enjoy it now, keykweenz.

Special shoutouts to scottiekins.

Hi Jeff.
Once we have it working well, I'll post the "best practices" and write a short program to auto-update a web page with links. That way anyone that does it will help provide more channels and towns to choose from (hopefully). I also plan to set one up to be on 24/7.

For right now, I'm relying on my freind Bill since I live in an apparmtent so can't have an antennea. I'll set up the permanent one at my work 20. Should do well from there, I hope.

Hello Stevo:

I didn't see any Corona, but I am told that those big stations do have a Corona at night time. The antennas where badly corroded, offering a intermittent connection I am sure.

The Top Hats helped a bunch.

Well, it isn't on the water, but I know Arizona is a state illegal immigrants pour into on a regular basis and nothing is being done by Bush. In fact, Bush just moved to reintroduce his failed attempt to give benefits to illegal immigrants that he dropped like a hot potato during the election when the entire country groaned. Of course, never mind that this is the furthest thing from conservatism and GOP founding principles and values,,,if Bush says it's ok and the right thing to do, we find legions of sheople bleating agreement in cued response, fooling themselves.

I have heard repeatedly and read several times of the rate in Ohio, that one in three is unemployed. I hope Ohio isn't the beginning of what the rest of the northern states in the east can expect. Then again, introducing policy that lifts laws against illegal immigrants is not in the best interest of this country or its people in any shape or form.

Now that the president has been reelected by people whom have had the wool pulled over their eyes, hang on. It's going to be a rough ride.
The plans have already been laid to reinstate the draft. Don't believe me? Google these two words: (1) Bush, and (2) Draft. You will be shocked. It does not bode well for your friends, loved ones, and co-workers. The facts were there, but were effectively hidden by the GOP. And to boot, think your acquaintances will be safe by being in college or leaving the country? Not so, that's there too. Education will not be a reason to avoid the draft, and extradition treaties have been upgraded to make sure no country is a safe haven for draft dodgers. And unlike Bush, you can't enlist in the Guard to keep safe either.

Why invoke Kerry when Bush actions are being examined and discussed? He is irrelevant.
The name "Kerry" simply replaced "Clinton" for avoiding the speaking of Bush.

You don't get it: Who said he's afraid of anything? The fact is that it's none of our business. And why doesn't his wife post her tax returns? Because it's none of our business. If Kerry has a mark on his record he doesn't want made public, that's his choice. If there's something in there that prevents him from running for president, then you can bet Rumsfeld and the Pentagon would know about it and have taken appropriate measures. Same deal with Kerry's wife: if she was cheating on her taxes, the IRS would be coming down on her like a ton of bricks. That's their job.

So lighten up on the conspiracy theories -- you can't assume someone

Call it what you want, use any euphamism that suits you. The fact is that skirting Vietnam, whether by slipping into the national guard or by slipping into Canada, was an act of cowardice. The protesters showed courage by publically facing down the government, and so did Kerry after his service. But Bush didn't even protest -- he just tucked-tail and ran to the recruiting office while his daddy phoned the selection committee.

So what's wrong with that? Gee, a country where everyone can practice other, a land of diversity.... is there something I'm missing here? Or is the Constitution just a worthless piece of paper?

>There are benefits to being in the majority. I am sick and tired of Your perspective is a little off, Dave. Nobody, not the minority and not the government, is holding your traditions and customs "hostage".

You are free to practice as you see fit. And so is the minority. And that's the way it should be. It's the very first part of the very first amendment to the Constitution, and since you haven't read it I'll quote it for you:

"Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof;"

Deal with it. If you don't like it, leave.

>The majority of voters who elected Bush are not all right wing >Christians, they are simply people with deeper moral values. The two >do not necessarily go hand in hand, despite efforts of the left to >paint them with the same broad brush.

I haven't seen the demographic analysis of the election. What I -have- seen is the Frontline story where Bush claims that a person can win an election with nothing more than the conservative Christian vote, a tactic which he learned during his daddy's campaign. A short time later he "found God" and became a Christian, which was just before he restarted his own political career (gee, what a coincidence).

>>The real issue here is that homosexual marriage is an issue of >>religion, not morality. If two gays want to get married, who is it

>That's not the point. Who it hurts is irrelevant. What it does to a >traditional institution is what matters.

You have the right to practice any traditions you want, and so does everyone else. But you seem to be of the mindset that you can impose -your- traditions and religious values on everyone else. You can't.

In the spirit of the upcoming holiday season, let's use the issue of Christmas being a national holiday. Well, traditionally, Christmas is a religious observance. It still is, and no law prevents anyone from doing so. But at the same time the holiday has 'evolved' into a new and unique tradition, seperate and distinct from its religious roots. Now according to your point of view, taking a Christmas holiday would be illegal for anyone who doesn't have a 700 Club membership card.

Well, Dave, that may sound ridiculous to you, but that's how your argument against gay marriage sounds to me. And that's certainly not in line with the values of the Christian religions -- to love each other as you love yourself, to not judge lest you be judged, to forgive others of their transgressions so that you will be forgiven of your transgressions..... maybe you should focus a little less on the traditions of your church and a little more on the values of your faith.

Constitution and become its enemy.

>The institution of marriage is born of religious tradition. It is a Marraige may or may not have been born of religious tradition, I don't know for sure cause I wasn't there. I tend to think it's more of a biological 'tradition'. Regardless, the US recognizes marraiges between atheists because there are no religious requirements for the union under federal law. Also, there are religions which are not restricted to monogamous marriages. So your argument that marriage should be defined by conservative Christians is not only biased, but is also unconstitutional since it favors an established religion.

>A "gay" marriage could never be, as it is in violation of those terms.

Those are -your- terms. You can't seem to grasp the notion that not everyone lives according to -your- terms, and in this great country you can't -force- anyone to live according to -your- terms. That's called FREEDOM!!!

>That being said, if the government wants to create a secular >equivalent of marriage for the purpose of extending the legal benefits >normally associated with "married" people, then by all means go ahead >and create that civil union. But DON'T call it a marriage....

Why not? That's what it is. By your logic, Buddhism cannot be called a religion even though that's what it is. It's not -your- religion, but it's still a religion. So a couple gays get married. It's not -your-marriage, is it? Why is it so hard for you to understand that the -meaning- of marriage can be something different than your own narrow interpretation?

economy".

>NAFTA was enacted by Clinton.

And is generally accepted as a disaster. Yet Bush is pushing the expanded version of NAFTA, the FTAA. Why? Because NAFTA & FTAA are not 'trade' agreements as much as they are 'investement' agreements. They pave a tariff-free path for US corporations to export jobs and/or setup shop in a country with weak environmental restrictions, raise the prices of prescription drugs, lower the standards for imported produce, and even pre-empt local and state laws -despite- voter disapproval. Only big corporations benefit from these agreements, and the rest must pay the price (as we have done with NAFTA).

But I suppose now that you know Bush supports it you will flip-flop

As I said before, there is no simple solution. Minimum wage increases must be made in conjunction with tax breaks for small businesses or the result is just as you described. When done properly, the wages go up, spending goes up, and the initial loss in profits is offset by the profits from increased spending (assuming, of course, you can freeze an increasing trade deficit -- if not you are just shipping more jobs overseas). China is hoarding oil because they see what's happening in Iraq and the middle east, which is a direct consequence of the actions of Bush!

The market isn't a "bit skittish", it's a volcano that's about to blow it's top. And when it does, you can bet that Bush & Co. are in a fine position to clean up on crude oil futures. If it -doesn't- blow its top then we will get a second, healthier dose of the 'stagflation' that we experienced in the '70s. Remember waiting for hours at the Damn straight! OPEC got a taste of what a US president can do in the '70s (from Carter) and they don't want a repeat of that fiasco. Not only that, Bush -did- call up OPEC just like you described. Twice. And twice we got a line from Saudi Arabia that they would be increasing production to lower the prices. Well, I'm still waiting......

Wrong. Crude oil is an inelastic product, which is why the government loves to tax the crap out of gas and diesel (and tobacco, and alcohol, and gambling, and.... well, you get the idea). Stocks and commodities are gambling in it's finest and most legal form. The price is set by people gambling on the future price of the commodity. When the future is uncertain (like when a superpower invades an oil-rich country and upsets the region) then the gamblers tend to make speculations that are not based on predictable trends. The result is a price that tends to fluctuate. The wider and faster the fluctuation, the more uncertain is the future of the commodity. Right now the prices is pushing through a roof, which means investors are betting that the price is going to go higher in the future (which is why they call it the "futures" market), and they are probably right. The reason they think oil is going to go higher is because they believe the region is so unstable that the flow of oil can be easily disrupted and cause a shortage. And they are right. And the cause of that instability is the war in Iraq which was caused by Bush.

Bush is responsible. Nobody else.

>Of course, it might help if we are allowed to drill for some oil of >our own in Alaska. But the enviro-liberals won't allow it. They >complain about the cost of oil, yet won't let us do anything about it.
>Go figure...

It's not easy to convince environmentalists that oil can be drilled without doing serious damage to a relatively pristine environment. But the real issue is that the oil will eventually run out. The focus needs to be on new sources of energy and energy storage. Bush sunk some money into hydrogen fuel cells, but only after it was already known that the system is generally impractical. The money needs to be spent on the development of things like that Mr. Fusion thingamajig on Doc Brown's DeLorean.

And the money for all that research could be easily raised by allowing the private development of some areas of Alaska. I mean, good grief, in a world where the primary resource is running short, that's just too much land to leave for elk shit. We can at least do controlled developments with a focus on environmental coexistence instead of total domination.

But like I said before, there is no simple solution.

You have yearly raises? And bonuses? Well good for you. You see, I don't have a job now because of two reasons: First, Bush's lack of support for cooperative health care and prescription drug imports (which tripled the health insurance costs of the station in two years); and the decision by the FCC (Powell the Younger, and members of the corporate cartel of the broadcast industry) to force out the smaller, independent stations through unfair competition, a decision supported by Bush (remember Sinclair?).

BTW, are you aware of Bush's financial interests in US drug companies? Do you think that has anything to do with the FDA refusing to allow drug imports from Canada? And before you answer that, consider that most of the drugs on this issue are made in America and exported to Canada on the cheap. Ok now, what excuse have -you- been told?

>The bottom line is that the economy IS growing again. It might not be

>Now we also have to look at the world economic picture. Manufacturing >jobs are being sent to places which provide the cheapest labor cost.

No, it's done out of greed. Pure and simple. That's THE motivating factor behind a for-profit business. The execs ship jobs overseas (and to temporary employment agencies) to raise the profit margins and justify their huge bonuses.

> If a
>U.S. company producing XYZ good, has to compete with a foreign company

There were no WMDs, no links to Al-Quaeda, no terrorist camps, and Iraq posed no imminent threat to the US. The UN sanctions were working, yet harsher diplomatic actions were still an option. That's more than enough evidence to prove that Bush was wrong. If you can't Wrong. As it turns out, Powell himself said that he knew most of the

>So what's wrong with that? Gee, a country where everyone can practice >whatever religion they choose, where everybody gets along with each >other, a land of diversity....

Diversity is a dividing wedge, not a unifying trait. The more people are different, the more people will find excuses to dislike other people. That is an unfortunate truth of human nature. We claim to embrace diversity, on a grand scale, but when it gets down to the nitty gritty, we tend to congregate with people more alike ourselves, then different.

>is there something I'm missing here? Or
>is the Constitution just a worthless piece of paper?

You should try reading it for content. The Constitution was never meant as a vehicle to deny the majority of its citizens from partaking in their religious and spiritual customs, when someone, who is not of their beliefs, finds that expression "offensive".

>You are free to practice as you see fit.

That's why there are all these movements to remove (sometimes decades old) the ten commandments from certain government buildings, other attempts to limit Christmas displays from public property, etc. You can google yourself if you don't believe me. The Christian faith has been under attack for some time now. Those who are spearheading these efforts often cite an overly simplistic interpretation of the 1st amendment (Separation of church and state) as the basis for their efforts to remove things that were a traditional part of this country for well over 100 years or more.

> And so is the minority. And

There have been cases of town battles over Christmas decorations.

By that are you referring to the overt commercialization of the

why they never got too upset with the "flaunting" of the Christmas holiday)?

The issue of marriage is not addressed in the Constitution. Therefore the Constitution becomes irrelevant in this case. Marriage is a contract before GOD, which supersedes any "right" that man may choose to grant.

What, did I stutter? The concept of marriage predates both this essentially a religiously based institution, the government would be violating their own Constitution by inserting itself into a matter of religion. Separation of church and state you know......

It's not a marriage in the true sense as it was not consecrated before the issue of marriage is to define it and regulate it for the purpose of taxation, and legal rights.

Carter had no balls. Just what do you think he did? The price of gasoline when from around $.30 a gallon in 1973 to $.60 by 1976 to $1.00 in 1979. In 1980, I was paying $1.20 for unleaded. The price dropped in the late 80's to just about $1.00/gallon, spiked up again during the Guld War, and then dropped again for most of the 90's.
Doesn't look like Carter did anything to stem the rise in price. In

That's what I was referring to when I stated that the price was based

That's one benefit of high oil prices. The incentive to find an alternative has never been higher. The whole Kyoto accord had, as part of its plan, a mandatory reduction in fuel consumption for developed countries. The only way to do that is to tax or ration it.

electric sources. But the bottom line is that our alternatives are Central to eigenSearch Advanced is the freedom to construct complex search explorations, save the forms for later use; and apply weight factor to each phrase and term. EigenSearch processing will apply eigenvector math and Jacobian matrices to construct search terms that are tailored to your exploration. Cross-pollination is also applied as described below. The eigenvector approach is clearly highly advanced and would normally be useful for very sophisticated applications. Nevertheless, anyone may utilize the method. An advanced form is simply a matrix in which the user types words and phrases randomly in a multi-cell form (please click thumbnail to view).

Advanced features

EigenOperator (cross pollination) and eigenvector constructs
Cross document content pollination within every web site directory tree (unlike conventional search engines and tools eigenSearch checks for your terms and phrases and drills down though multiple directory documents)
EigenSearch cross-pollination is applied to documents within the same (tree) level in a URL (peer documents). Thereby limiting the amount of contamination of results Illustration:
"Blood Hounds" + "English Breed" will present documents that contain either of these phrases within the same peer level in a document storage structure; for example, within the directory: www.smartdogs/hounds.
eigenSearch limits pollinating occurrences outside a peer level. For example; "blood hounds" + "English breed" found in two different directories would not report an eigenSearch result: i.e. "Blood hounds" found in www.smartdogs/hounds and "English Breed" found in. www.smartdogs/hounds/Europe would not be found. EigenSearch therefore searches one tree (peer) level in a site and looks for multiple occurrences of multiple phrases across all documents within this peer level.

Corporate products can be tailored to drill down infinite levels for eigenOperator (cross-pollinating operator) matching.
eigenSearch single phrase results will find all documents and show the results as independent findings. This way the user can find results across many documents and the combined highly constrained results are reserved for a single level cross pollination. Extremely high (cross-pollinating) eigenValues will correspond to finely granular and refined search explorations.

Beta users receive the following features:
Login and password
Save search constructs for later use in your own personal construct tables
EigenOperator (cross Pollinating Operator) advanced features as described above (eigenvector to follow)
Database (Table) upload and eigenvector computations
EigenSearch seeks 300,000 beta testers for its advanced eigenOperator based cognitive engine. This engine will allow for a multiplicity of search parameters for users to select so as to mathematically narrow results. The system will employ eigenVectors, eigenValues and eigenMatrices to determine relevance to user searches; thereby rendering high fidelity confirmed search results.
Naturally the computational power for doing such math is why beta testers are required. Each tester is welcome to comment on user friendliness, speed, change and ergonomic elegance. It is an eigenSearch goal to continue advancing the user interface so as to remain intuitively simple to use while at the same time providing hi-fidelity explorations. All beta testers will receive a login and password, which provides entry into features for saving search constructs and parameters according to their own classification approach. Saved results and parameters can be used at any time and modified to alter search results. Beta users will be able to import their own data sets (2-dimentional) and perform an eigenValue analysis.

Hi, EB, welcome to the hobby.
First, let's start with clarification on some terms you are using, and others that are good to know.
CB- Citizens Band- Uses 45 HF frequencies using 10 kHz steps ranging from 26.965 to 27.405. There are 5 of those Channels that are used for surface remote control of cars, boats, etc. CB radios are limited to 5 watts. This band does not require a license from the FCC for anyone to use it. Some other unlicensed services are FRS and MURS.
FRS- Family Radio Service- a low power (1/2 watt) limited distance (typically 1/4 to 1/2 mile and less in a building), that is supposed to be for families, but businesses use it too. Handy for an intercom at the house, or keeping in touch with other people you are traveling with. The FCC rule is that the transmitter must be attached to the antenna, and the antenna can not be changed.
MURS- Multi User Radio Service- five channels on high band (see below) that you can do quite a bit one, but limited to (I believe) 2 watts, and a certain antenna height and gain. You can do digital and other modes also.
Hertz- A measurement of frequency, one cycle per second is one Hertz. Heinrich Rudolf Hertz was the first one to produce electromagnetic waves artificially. (Or at least he was the first one to realize it.)
HF- High Frequency- a range in the radio spectrum from 3 mHz to 30 mHz.
VHF- Very high Frequency- 30 to 300 mHz. There are two portions of this band that are commonly referred to as low band and high band in the scanning and two-way world. These are 30-50 mHz, and 150-174 mHz respectively.
Channel- typically a numerical representation of a frequency, such as channel 19. This can also refer to a pair of frequencies such as 444.175/449.175 or ones used for a service such as a fire or police repeater.
Two Way- typically used when talking about commercial applications, such as a landscaping company.

A modern scanner is frequency programmable, can scan 30 to 1000 channels at 10 to over 50 channels per second. Once you get into the 100 channel scanner range, most divide the total number of channels into 5 or 10 banks. Each of these banks can be turned on or off so you can scan any one or all at once. This is handy for separating agencies or geographic locations for ease of selection. A scanner you can stay well informed to what is happening in your community.

CB's come in all flavors, from ones with only a channel readout, volume, squelch and a place to plug in the mike, to ones with roger beeps, echo (one I haven't figured out the use of yet), talkback 'extra channels' (goes out of the CB band), and washes your dishes and does your laundry for you. CB's you can talk to and listen to others on CB. This is good and bad. Good because it can be a nice way to keep in touch with your friends, and bad because there are plenty of morons on it too. Thankfully, that's one reason the power switch is there.

The smaller radio's are actually preferred by some since they are portable. Larger ones are inconvenient as a carry on in an airplane, or to mount under your dash. You will find you can fit many of these in a room. Your limitation on the lower bands (HF and low band) will be the portables' antenna. If you can connect an external antenna, that will improve performance dramatically when you don't need to be portable.
You won't find scanners heating up unless you overcharge the batteries while in it, or when it is placed near a heat source, and neither is recommended. A transmitter, on the other hand will heat up under normal use, and heat rapidly when a heat sink is missing or a high SWR is present. A high SWR can also damage the transmitter.

SWR- Standing Wave Ratio- This is a comparison of the transmitted (forward) power to the power that is being returned (reflected) from the antenna and/or feedline (coax). It is a ratio, written as 1:1, 1.2:1, 2:1, and said one to one, one point two to one, two to one swr. The goal is to have no reflected power (1:1), but that usually isn't the case. A high swr is caused when the antenna system is not at the intended impedance, typically 50 ohms for all stock radio systems. 2:1 or below is acceptable.

Impedance- it's a complicated answer, just know that when they don't match between the transmitter, appliances, coax, and antenna, you have something other than a 1:1 match. Anyone have a simple answer?

As far as listening quantity, get an inexpensive scanner from a friend or someone from ebay with a 98%-100% feed back rating. You can always sell it if you decide you don't like the hobby.
If you wish to talk to your friends, get everyone who doesn't have one to buy a cb, and external antennas. I recommend the Anntron 99 for a vertical antenna, and what ever your budget allows for a cb. Use the RG-8 coax if you can, it has less loss than RG-58. Your antenna is the limitation in all radio systems (just like the portables), so get the best antenna possible. Talking over the 5-8 miles can be done with a vertical, but if all of your friends live in one general direction and you have the money and room, put up a beam. You get what you pay for, but don't get ripped off.

Coax loss- a number in deci-Bels showing how much of your signal is lost due to the design of the feedline. All feed line has loss, just some more than others. Generally, the smaller the diameter the more lossy the coax is. The higher the frequency you go, the more lossy feedline is. It won't be noticeable from one end of cb to the other, but going up to 144 or 440 for ham use is a major difference. A 3dB gain is twice as much, and a 3 dB loss is half as much. 10 dB is 10 times difference, It is logarithmic.

Vertical and beam- a vertical is a single element vertically polarized antenna, like the fm antenna on the fender of your car. A beam has 2 or more elements, is directional, and can be vertically or horizontally polarized. CB and FM (for the scanner) uses vertical polarization. Beans can be flat and many different shapes. More elements usually means more gain, which means you can talk farther. TV antennas on houses are horizontal beams.

Recommended reading: Radio Shack sells Police Call. Read the getting started section in the very front many times and this will be a great start to your radio hobby. Personally, I try to not go to Radio Shack except for emergency parts runs, but there are a few select items that they carry I am impressed with.
An advanced, detailed radio/electronics book is the ARRL handbook, and will explain enough to almost make you an electronics engineer. If you like it and get to a point you want more, get your ham ticket. Try your best to do the Morse code, that will give you HF/shortwave.

I personally have all types of comms available. CB, FRS, MURS, and ham radio. Scanners: Pro-96, BC-780, 2 Pro-2026's, Pro-2036. Ham: FT-747, SB-102, SB-220, IC-740, 3kW tuner, tri-band beam, G5RV, TH-F6, FT-50, FT-8900, IC-2700. I just built my first 440 repeater, too. That uses a Mitrek. I modified one of the Pro-2026's with a discriminator jack and built a data slicer for following a trunk system.
If I had to only choose one of the above, probably the TH-F6. I started in scanning and CB back in the eighties, and I have been a ham for 15 years.

I know I missed something and the way I write it may be a little confusing, but this will be enough for you to chew on for now. I think I need to find a hobby.

Just because I can't avoid it either, did you live under a rock for the last 50 years? Do you have a tube cell phone?

I vote my conscience, and at one time I did support Bush. I've taken another look at this buffoon from my state, and I've seen him for what he is. What lost it for Kerry is the fact that he's almost as fugly as Dogie...the women voted Bush in...ask those you know. Same thing with Clinton. The above being said, I didn't support Kerry as a Dem anymore than I did Bush as Republican...but I felt/feel it is time to stop the madman we have at the reins before he ruins our country and makes the rest of the world hate us more than they already do. The lies he's told us, coupled with his unmatched arrogance is not a good thing for the US. We cannot exist in this world without friendly countries, and the sooner that sinks into the bullheaded Bush supporters that have taken the bait he's placed, the better for us and the rest of the world.

Think about it...why do you think he's lost such important members of his cabinet? Ya think maybe some can't stand what their boss is doing? Ya think maybe they are a tad bit smarter than their bullheaded boss, and are cutting their losses before they get dragged down with him? Like I said, I didn't really support Kerry as the candidate, but I do know I don't like the road we're headed down, and I was willing to give the other guy a chance. I don't like the status quo.

Oh, and BTW, Condoleezza Rice to fill the Sec of St office? Ol' junior is sure courting the minority and female vote, is he not? Time to try to court the Dems back no matter how shamefully low he stoops.

Now that the president has been reelected by people whom have had the wool pulled over their eyes, hang on. It's going to be a rough ride.
The plans have already been laid to reinstate the draft. Don't believe me? Google these two words: (1) Bush, and (2) Draft. You will be shocked. It does not bode well for your friends, loved ones, and co-workers. The facts were there, but were effectively hidden by the

not be a reason to avoid the draft, and extradition treaties have been upgraded to make sure no country is a safe haven for draft dodgers. And

Try Google the words Kerry draft and Kerry taxes, it wouldn't bode well with him either.

Well even though I'm a Bush supporter, it's a shame the way Powell was treated by the administration. It will be interesting, but I think Powell has to much pride to start spouting off right away,

LOL!!!, it depends on ones taste for beer. I'll tell you, when in Mexico for a week and all you drink are Mexican beers, it's nice to get home and have a few Budweiser's or something along those lines.

He wont. He's always been a good little soldier. Mi Lay, Iran Contra, the Gulf War, and the present quagmire we find ourselves in now.

Powell is _not_ a hero.

Jeff

In the week ending Oct. 17, there were 23 American soldiers killed in Iraq. I saw no prominent mention anywhere. If there were 23 policemen killed in New York in a week, the city would shut down. If there were 23 police officers killed in the nation in a week, it would be a national calamity.

But the 23 dead American soldiers went virtually unmentioned. I watch the "Today" show and they say that now we are going to see all the good things happening in Iraq. Insanity.

It may not be a matter of pride. If he starts singing about Bush's indiscretions he may very well send himself to prison by disclosing his degree of participation in the Reagan/Bush/Bush regime. Don't forget he was National Security Advisor when Bush #1 was feeding microbes and intelligence to Saddam, during the Iran/Contra and arms-for-hostages scams, and God knows what else. How much you wanna bet he dies within a couple years from a plane crash, brain tumor, or some 'unidentified' blood disease?

And don't forget that GW didn't 'pick' Rice for his cabinet. Quite the contrary -- it was GW that was picked to run for president by her and her close-knit circle of "advisors".

And that is the key point. We all knew that an attack was probable at efforts to thwart those attempts a bit difficult.......

It depends on the credibility of the intel. Evidently they had (Or thought they had) more credible intel WRT WMD than on specific terror attacks. In any case, we're all just speculating, since none of us has security clearance to know the truth.

The problem with your assertion that Bush lied is that in order to pull off this "lie" he would have to have the cooperation of Britain, Israel, and the other countries who also furnished intel.

If Bush fabricated the intel, then the intel from the other countries would contradict it, and those leaders would say so (or at least know it). Guess what? They haven't. So either we have a world-wide conspiracy to lie, or the intel was faulty.

Sometimes the truth is stranger than fiction.

But you are right, and this underscores the whole nature of all this speculation about "lying", None of us will even know the whole truth.

Atlantic Journal Constitution, 9/29/02,
The President's Real goal in Iraq,...By Jay Bookman

-Over the last year corporate media have made much of Saddam Hussein and his stockpile of weapons of mass destruction. Rarely did the press or, especially, television address the possibility that larger strategies might also have driven the decision to invade Iraq. Broad political strategies regarding foreign policy do indeed exist and are part of the public record.

The following is a summary of the current strategies that have formed over the last 30 years; strategies that eclipse the pursuit of oil and that preceded Hussein's rise to power:

In the 1970s, the United States and the Middle East were embroiled in a tug-of-war over oil. At the time, American military presence in the Gulf was fairly insignificant and the prospect of seizing control of Arab oil fields by force was pretty unattainable. Still, the idea of this level of dominance was very attractive to a group of hard-line, pro-military Washington insiders that included both Democrats and Republicans. Eventu ally labeled "neoconservatives," this circle of influential strategists played important roles in the Defense Departments of Ford, Reagan and Bush Sr., at conservative think tanks throughout the '80s and '90s, and today occupies several key posts in the White House, Pentagon, and State Department. Most principal among them are:

·Dick Cheney and Donald Rumsfeld, our current Vice-President and Defense Secretary respectively, who have been closely aligned since they served with the Ford administration in the 1970s;

·Deputy Defense Secretary Paul Wolfowitz, the key architect of the post-war reconstruction of Iraq;

·Richard Perle, past-chairman and still-member of the Pentagon's Defense Policy Board that has great influence over foreign military policies;

·William Kristol, editor of the Weekly Standard and founder of the powerful, neo-conservative think-tank, Project for a New American Century.

In the 1970s, however, neither high-level politicos, nor the American people, shared the priorities of this small group of military strategists. In 1979 the Shah of Iran fell and U.S. political sway in the region was greatly jeopardized. In 1980, the Carter Doctrine declared the Gulf "a zone of U.S. influence." It warned (especially the Soviets) that any attempt to gain control of the Persian Gulf region would be regarded as an assault on the vital interests of the U.S. and repelled by any means necessary, including military force. This was followed by the creation of the Rapid Deployment Force ☐ a military program specifically designed to rush several thousand U.S. troops to the Gulf on short notice.

Under President Reagan, the Rapid Deployment Force was transformed into the U.S. Central Command that oversaw the area from eastern Africa to Afghanistan. Bases and support facilities were established throughout the Gulf region, and alliances were expanded with c ountries such as Israel, Saudi Arabia, and Iraq.

Since the first Gulf War, the U.S. has built a network of military bases that now almost completely encircle the oil fields of the Persian Gulf.

In 1989, following the end of the Cold War and just prior to the Gulf War, Dick Cheney, Colin Powell, and Paul Wolfowitz produced the 'Defense Planning Guidance' report advocating U.S. military dominance around the globe. The Plan called for the United States to maintain and grow in military superiority and prevent new rivals from rising up to challenge us on the world stage. Using words like 'preemptive' and military 'forward presence,' the plan called for the U.S. to be dominant over friends and foes alike. It concluded with the assertion that the U.S. can best attain this position by making itself 'absolutely powerful.'

The 1989 plan was spawned after the fall of the Soviet Union. Without the traditional threat to national security, Cheney, Powell and Wolfowitz knew that the military budget would dwindle without new enemies and threats. In an attempt to salvage defense funding, Cheney and company constructed a plan to fill the 'threat blank'. On August 2, 1990 President Bush called a press conference. He explained that the threat of global war had significantly receded, but in its wake a new danger arose. This unforeseen threat to national security could come from any angle and from any power.

Iraq, by a remarkable coincidence, invaded Northern Kuwait later the same day.
Cheney et al. were out of political power for the eight years of Clinton's presidency.
DURING THIS TIME THEY (neo-conservatives named above) FOUNDED THE PROJECT FOR THE NEW AMERICAN CENTURY (PNAC). The most influential product of the PNAC was a report entitled "Rebuilding America's Defense," (www.newamericancentury.org) which called for U.S. military dominance and control of global economic markets.

With the election of George W. Bush, the authors of the plan were returned to power: Cheney as vice president, Powell as Secretary of State, and Wolfowitz in the number two spot at the Pentagon. With the old Defense Planning Guidance as the skeleton, the three went back to the drawing board. When their new plan was complete, it included contributions from Wolfowitz's boss Donald Rumsfeld. The old 'preemptive' attacks have now become 'unwarned attacks.'

The Powell-Cheney doctrine of military 'forward presence' has been replaced by 'forward deterrence.' The U.S. stands ready to invade any country deemed a possible threat to our economic interests.

Update by David Armstrong
Just days after this story appeared, the Bush administration unveiled its "new" National Security Strategy, which effectively validated the article's main thesis. The NSS makes clear that the administration will pursue a policy of pre-emption and overwhelming military superiority aimed at ensuring US dominance.

Since that time, the major media have generally come around to the point of view presented in the article. The New York Times, which originally rejected the article's premise, now makes a virtual mantra of the notion that the current security strategy is little more than a warmed-over version of the policy drafted during the first Bush administration of preventing new rivals from rising up to challenge the US in the wake of the Soviet Union's collapse. The article circulated widely, particularly in the run up to the war in Iraq, and was entered into the Congressional Record. It also became a topic of discussion on such outlets as the BBC, NPR, MSNBC, various talk radio shows, and European newspapers. In the process, it has substantially helped shape the debate about the Bush administration's foreign policy.

Update by Bob Dreyfuss
For months leading up to the war against Iraq, it was widely assumed among critics of the war that a hidden motive for military action was Iraq's oil, not terrorism or weapons of mass destruction. In fact, "No Blood for Oil" became perhaps the leading slogan and bumper sticker of the peace movement. Yet, there was very little examination in the media of the role of oil in American policy toward Iraq and the Persian Gulf, and what coverage did exist tended to pooh-pooh or debunk the idea that the war had anything to do with oil. So, I set out to place the war with Iraq in the context of a decades-long U.S. strategy of building up a military presence in the region, arguing that even before the war, the U.S. had turned the Gulf into a U.S. protectorate. Perhaps most importantly, I showed that a motive behind the war was oil as a national security issue, as a strategic commodity, not as a commercial one ☐ and that, in fact, most of the oil industry itself was either opposed to or ambivalent about the idea of war against Saddam Hussein. Yet the neoconservatives in the Bush administration, whose forebears had proposed occupying the oil fields of the Gulf in the mid-1970s, sought control of the oil in the region as the cornerstone of American empire.

Since the beginning of this war, it has become clear that the United States (and the U.K.) have aggressively sought to maintain direct control over Iraq's oil industry. When looters devastated Baghdad, only the Ministry of Oil was unscathed, since U.S. marines protected it. Since then, handpicked Iraqi officials have been installed in the ministry, under the supervision of U.S. military and civilian officials, and there is movement toward privatization of Iraq's oil industry, a point that I emphasized in my writing on the topic before the war. Not only that, but it is increasingly clear that France, Russia, and China are likely to be excluded from either rebuilding the industry and securing contracts for future Iraqi oil delivery.

I can't say that the media followed up on my exposure of this issue, except that I appeared on a number of radio and television talk show programs as a result of my writing on Iraq, in both Mother Jones and The American Prospect, as well as C-Span, CNBC, and CBC-TV in Canada. I was also invited to make a presentation on "The Thirty-Year Itch" at the Transnational Institute in Amsterdam. According to Mother Jones, the article drew more traffic to its web site than any other article.

Subject: Fw: The five iron

A man staggers into an emergency room with a concussion, multiple bruises, two black eyes and a five iron wrapped tightly around his throat. Naturally, the doctor asks him what happened.

Well, it was like this", said the man. "I was having a quiet round of golf with my wife, when at a difficult hole, we both sliced our ball into a pasture of cows. We went to look for them, and while I was rooting around noticed that one of the cows had something white at its rear end."

"I walked over and lifted up the tail, and sure enough, there was a golf ball with my wife's monogram on it stuck right in the middle of the cow's butt. That's when I made my big mistake."

"What did you do?" asks the doctor.

"Well, I lifted the cow's tail and yelled to my wife, 'Hey, this looks like yours!".

"I don't remember much after that."

A Splinter Problem

A lady from Missoula, Montana who was a tree hugger and an anti-hunter, purchased a piece of timberland. There was a large tree on one of the highest points in her tract. She wanted to get a good view of the natural splendor of her land so she started to climb the big tree. As she neared the top, she encountered a spotted owl that attacked her.

In her haste to escape, the lady slid down the tree to the ground and got many splinters in her crotch.

In considerable pain, she hurried to the nearest country doctor. She told him what an environmentalist and anti-hunter she was, and how she came to get all the splinters. The doctor listened to her story with great patience and then told her to go into the examining room and he would see if he could help her.

She sat and waited for three hours before the doctor reappeared.

The angry lady demanded, "What took you so long?"

He smiled and then told her, "Well, I had to get permits from the Environmental Protection Agency, the Forest Service, and the Bureau of Land Management before I could remove old-growth timber from a recreational area and I'm sorry, but they all turned me down

Not one of those countries furnished intel claiming Hussein had WMDS..they rather, merely concurred with what the US told them. Again, the US does not rely on foreign Intel as the basis of their decisions for waging war.
Of course, you can be asked (again) to provide for a single, credible source that provides for your theory based in no facts.....but the fact remains, not one of these countries provided anything at all to the US to even suggest that Hussein had WMDS, other than nodding their heads to the rhythm of the right. By the way,,have you ascertained for yourself that Pulitzer you claimed never was awarded to the St. Pete Times for outing the lies of Bush and his manufactured satellite photos, actually occurred, or do you need a link to claim a left-wing conspiracy?

What? Are you serious? The whole presidential campaign was run on a policy of blaming Bush from everything from the War in Iraq, to the loss of jobs, to the price of oil, to the spreading of AIDS in Africa.
If it was something that could be perceived as "wrong" the blame was laid at Bush's feet.

Republicans only took over a majority of congress in 1995. That's hardly "most" of the last 25 years. And since Carter and Clinton's 2 terms is only one term less than Reagan's and both Bush's, it's not an overwhelming majority either. It's also true that much of the best economic conditions this country ever had, were on the heel of republican presidents. Not that I believe that the sitting president has much more than a perceptive influence on the economy anyway. But from a big business perspective anyway, they seem to favor republicans as they are seen as "business friendly". The stock market has been making steady gains since Bush won the election. That's all driven by perception. Sustaining those gains will be the job of the market itself.

Most of the "mud" in this campaign was "slung" from the hands of those various 527 groups, who don't have to answer to anyone. Those 527's supporting liberals and democratic positions outnumbered those supporting republicans by a significant margin.

Bush's campaign criticisms were strictly limited to the issues themselves, which is perfectly acceptable for a campaign. To his credit, Kerry was also somewhat issue focussed. But when you have an army of detached mudslingers doing the real dirty work, you can stay clean.

Howard Dean advanced the theory in an interview before the democratic primary. As to the rest, Al Gore made the comment that Bush "betrayed this country, and that he "prayed on our fears". Ted Kennedy accused the president of "concocting the war for political gain". Dick Gephart accused the president of being a "Miserable failure". I could go on and on, You can just enter those phrases into google with the associated names and I'm sure you can find both the transcripts AND the audio clips.

Do you deny that the democrats will oppose practically anything Bush of the republicans advance that would further their agenda? Do you not believe that they will do whatever they have to to gain back their political clout, the American people be damned? I've already heard audio clips of democrats in California a year or so back, who were caught speaking on an open mike, that they were unaware of. A remark was made that they hoped that the economy stayed in the crapper, as it would be better for them politically. Are these the kind of people you want making the laws for you?

Yes, it is from a purely cynical perspective. But we're now in a situation where the republicans control the government more than ever before. You will see increasingly desperate acts by democrats to do whatever they can to thwart republican attempts to bring their vision for a better America to pass. Then those same democrats who block these attempts will be first on the front line to blame the republicans for "failing" to make anything better.

kerryoniraq presented video clips of Kerry on the Iraq situation from shifting of his positions throughout the time. It's really quite revealing.

That fact is that Kerry significantly changed his position to the point that you could hear it. His most famous line of the whole election, will be "I actually voted FOR the 87 billion, before I voted against it".

>The -real- problem is that these tactics work. The US is in bad shape

I'd say that 52% of this country did use some thought in the past election. This country does not want liberals in office. We still believe in working fro what we have, and not in a larger role for government beyond protection.

After making this comment, you would have us believe that you then voted for Nader, a man who has even less presence, fewer resources, and if, by some miracle, he actually won, would be alone in a sea of red and blue? You would vote for someone who didn't stand a change of winning? If you wanted to end the reign of Bush, then it stands to reason that you'd vote for the best chance of doing that. But you didn't. Yet you vigorously defend Kerry's positions with the enthusiasm of a college intern at a political campaign.

Again, I state, something doesn't smell right.

That's exactly what they want to do. They, for the most part marginalize the influence of God, and want to replace it with government as the most important entity. You just haven't realized it yet. Just listen to some of the leading liberal voices these days, and you can see the vitriol just seething below the surface. Since they've been handed their heads after this last election, they are having an increasingly difficult time keeping their composure, and the cases of blunt outbursts are rising at an eye opening rate. Take some time and scan the website run by these people. You might wake up.

My sites have plenty of facts. Did you read the FBI documents? And just how many "facts" do you expect to find that are unclassified?

Saying that the war was about oil is not a fact, it's conjecture.
Saying that Bush failed is not a fact, it's a conclusion based on opinion.
Saying that Bush lied about intel is little more than faith-based opinion. You want to believe it, so it's true, despite the glaring

A possibility is a potential piece of exculpatory evidence. An additional scenario.

If I were to walk down a street and stumble across a dead body moments before the police come up, does my presence there conclude that I killed the guy, or are there other possibilities? Should the most

That's as intellectually dishonest as the guys claiming that a season of excessively hot weather in one part of the country is the result of global warming, and then claiming that the excessive cold in another part is the second coming of the ice age. You make the conclusion that we knew the strength of their resistance

WMD, which therefore leads to the conclusion that the intel was a deliberate lie. But that conclusion is a house of cards. But you'll defend it to the end.

Now turn it around. It's equally supportable by the evidence that since we have not found WMD, that our intel was faulty. Since we have that that intel was faulty as well. Otherwise the "war" would be over.

You need to do a little research into enlistment info. They don't seem to have much problem getting new recruits. Over 52% of this country believe that the war is justified.

But the idea of stretching the military even thinner is crazy when a two pronged aerial and ground attack was just as effective and safer for the troops. The only downside was a greater hit to the infrastructure, and more collateral damage. But that's still better that a greater loss of American lives.

Once again, you act as if you were there and have inside knowledge of what the atmosphere was. And, as usual, you would be wrong.

I can pull from my own personal experience here in corporate management. You have meetings with the big wigs. You present your data and your recommendations for a solution. The group weighs the pros and cons of each solution, and makes a decision based on it. Now, while you are in that room, you are free to disagree and offer supporting evidence to back it up. But you don't "diss" the boss or the other people in the room, in a public forum, in an act of sour grapes and expect to keep your job. THAT is reality Frank. It's totally different from a grunt in the back room of a radio station who only has one boss to answer to.

If those generals had kept their personal feelings out of the limelight, they'd still have their jobs.

>>The FACTS are that a couple of generals were fired. What you filled in

But since we met most of our objectives in Iraq you cannot in all honesty consider it a "failure". Dogma stifles many innovative or new ideas or paradigms. Those generals who were fired were relying on tried and true methods which worked in the past under different circumstances. Rumsfeld wanted to try something new. Unless you give it a chance, how will you ever know if it would be better or not?

There was certainly no historical examples to pull from.

>Spin it anyway you want, but on one side you have several professional

That's is an extreme exaggeration. The reality is that you had a few generals who wanted things one way, and other generals who wanted it another. Rumsfeld was the champion of the "new" way. And he had the final say. It was not one man against everyone else.

THIS IS FUNNY--TRY IT!!!

Follow the instructions to find your new name. Once you have your new name, put it in the Subject box and forward it to friends and family and co-workers. Don't forget to forward it back to the person who sent it to you, so they know you participated. And don't go all 'adult'

The following in an excerpt from a children's book, "Captain Underpants And the Perilous Plot of Professor Poopypants" by Dave Pilkey. The evil Professor forces everyone to assume new names......

Use the third letter of your first name to determine your new first name:
a = poopsie b = lumpy c = buttercup d = gadget
e = crusty f = greasy g = fluffy h = cheeseball
i = chim-chim j = stinky
k = flunky l = bootie m = pinky n = zippy
o = goober p = doofus q = slimy r = loopy
s = snotty t = tootie u = dorkey v = squeezit
w= oprah x = skipper y = dinky z = zsa-zsa

Use the second letter of your last name to determine the first half of your new last name:
a = apple b = toilet c = giggle
d = burger e = girdle f = barf
g = lizard h = waffle i = cootie j = monkey
k = potty l = liver m = banana n = rhino
o = bubble p = hamster q = toad r = gizzard
s = pizza t = gerbil u = chicken v = pickle
w = chuckle x = tofu y = gorilla z = stinker

Use the fourth letter of your last name to determine the second half of your new last name:
a = head b = mouth c = face d = nose
e = tush f = breath g = pants h = shorts
i = lips j = honker k = butt l = brain
m = tushie n = biscuits o = hiney p = chunks
q = toes r = buns s = fanny t = sniffer
u = sprinkles v = kisser w = squirt
x = humperdinck y = brains z = juice

Thus, for example, George W. Bush's new name is Goober Chickenshorts.

William Jefferson Clinton is Bootie Liverbiscuits.

John Kerry is Cheeseball Girdle Buns

Now when you SEND THIS ON...use your new name as the subject.

And remember that children laugh an average of 146 times a day;
adults laugh an average of 4 times a day.

Two old men feeling they are close to their last days on earth decided to have a last night on the town. After a few drinks they end up at the local brothel.The madam takes one look at the two old geezers and whispers to her manager, "go up to the first two rooms and put an inflated doll in each bed, I'm not wasting two of my girls on them". These two are so old and drunk they won't know the difference."

The two men go up the stairs and take care of their business. As they are walking home the first one says,"You know, I think my girl was dead!"

"Dead?" says his friend, "why would you think that?""Well, she never moved or made a sound all the time I was loving her.."

His friend says, "I think mine was a witch."

"A WITCH!!! Why the hell would you say that?"

"Well, I was making love to her, kissing on her neck and I gave it a little bite, then she farted and flew out the window.

Do you truely belive that the FCC gives a rusty fuck what anyone does on here? 2nd,,,can you PROVE he is doing anything wrong? I do not see where he said that amp was for any given freq. let alone the CB band. Here is an idea,,,get off your middle aged,fat ass. Give your wife and kids the attention that you give your PC. Praise God and begain a new life with love and happiness in it vs the hate you spend all your time trying to spred out here.
It must be really sad to live the life you live. I guess there is no cure for white trash that does not see themselfs as being so fucked up. Do you ever wounder why the world sees you the way they do? Or do you think and belive it's just everyone else who is wrong??
Sad,,,,,,,

John H.

PS.....I am sure Stan likes the attention you are giving him. It keeps his post at the top of the group and gives him a better shot at selling his amp.

Over 50 million think I am not full of shit also. And no, I will not hide in a closet, and no, I am not a drug addict. But, you most certainly are not Being both bored and open-minded, I actually took a second look at this website. I started with their newly-found documents, specifically the 1971 'circular' that was allegedly passed around to the Vietnamese yet was written in English. Now you and your kind raised a big fuss about the CBS forgeries, but you were whining so loud you didn't learn a doggone thing. This 'circular' has the same variable-width font that was -not- available on typewriters of the day (and was one of the problems which raised suspicions about the CBS documents). Yet at the same time it has floating letters which would indicate that it was typed on a manual typewriter. Now the possibility of a Vietnamese circular written in English on a manual typewriter in variable-width font in 1971 is nothing less than preposterous. In fact, it's just as preposterous if it was typed -after- 1971 because none of the floating letters on that 'circular' were faded at the top, which is an effect that happens when the type head strikes too high to impress the ribbon onto the paper (remembering that the surface of the roller is curved).

Anyone who has ever typed on a manual typewriter knows exactly what I'm talking about.

IOW, that document is a forgery, Dave. And you fell for it. In fact, you wanted to believe it so bad that you made Dan Rather look like a Bush supporter! ROTFLMMFAO!!!

Now take your Soma as I return you to my killfile......<-replonk->

Well, if the Russians nuke the terrorists, then they can't say the good ole U. S. of A did it! Go get em Russia! WE should have nuked Afghanistan in the first place rather than going over with men. No screwing around, just drop the bomb. That donkey cock sucking Bin Laden wouldn't have been able to escape that!

I'm not so sure the Germans were so bad (though I could be wrong), but the French, they are a real bunch of back stabbing pricks. Not to mention pussies.

The Soviets were NOT supplying Iran, they were supplying Iraq, along with the US and UK and Germany and France. The US went as far as to REMOVE Saddam's Iraq from the State Dept list of Terrorist Nations, thus easing the way to transfer BILLIONS of dollars to him not to mention chemical and biological weapons components. And when Saddam gassed Halabja, the Pentagon tried to protect Saddam. That's the ugly fact, so stop trying to make up BS.

I think the US or Russia should blow the Al-Jazeer network off the air. That is "one" of the methods used to propagate the BS of Bin Laden. As long as he is made a star, he'll keep looking for attention. Take Al-Jazeer out, then nuke Afghanistan. Go from there with the rest of them. Instead of pussy footing around, gather up the balls to do it and get it over with. Guaranteed, no one will screw with US (or Russia) after that. I'm glad Russia is doing something about theirs. Those ass holes that stormed that school were nothing but Pussies, to go after innocent kids. That's how those "pussies" operate. Not man enough to fight real men. Suicide bombers, whatever. ALL PUSSIES. They take the quick way out. That's not a real fight. We all know, committing suicide is a pussies' way out of life.

IF they want to die so bad, fine - round up all their sand covered stinky asses and put them in one big building, then blow it to hell. We need to quit screwing around with these ass holes. Quit playing by rules of decency, they don't! WAR IS WAR. The sooner we quit screwing around, the faster the job will get done. That Fallujah deal was brewing for how long? We finally went in and kicked ass. They should have just bombed the hell out of Fallujah and been done with it - weeks ago.
If they're hiding in a Mosque, so be it, level it - we can build them a new one. WE're rebuilding everything else! Show the enemy that no place is safe to hide. Hell, you show fear of going in an area, they'll all congregate there and come out like the cock roaches they are when the need arises. Them scum bags don't deserve mercy. Al-Jazeer should be Al-Brazeer - the pussy network. And I ain't talking sexually! Instead of Bin Laden and his donkey cock sucking followers hiding behind their skirts and a camera, take off their panties, put a pair of trousers on and come out and fight like a real bunch of men.

The other thing, our media.. They PISS me off. They have NO right - showing those our men shoot in the face of war. Yes, innocent casualties will happen. 3000+ of ours died in an act of war - totally innocent. WHY should we be made the bad guy? Our media has NO PLACE in the midst of a war. They make it worse than it is. Our men are being shot up, no one cares. We shoot one of theirs and OH MY GOD, we committed a sin. SCREW THAT. It's kill or be killed.

Those damned RULES that we follow are going to end up making our military seem like a bunch of candy asses. Like the one officer, Court Martialed for making a prisoner talk - using a hand gun aimed at him? I don't suppose the beheading of innocent people is any worse? Like they probably weren't tortured before hand? Yeah right. These people who want to follow rules, got their priorities ass backwards. To hell with the rules. KICK ASS. Patton would roll over in his grave to see how some of this shit is being done. Our enemy shows no mercy and take innocent lives to boot. TO HELL WITH RULES.

Wipe the scum out and be quick about it. The sooner we quit screwing around with them, the sooner they'll get the message - stop or die.

Nah, just how much Corona, Pacifico, Modelo, Bohemia, Carta Blanca, Dos XX and all the other local favorites? When you're drinking from sun up, to well past midnight, fishing, golfing, Etc Etc, you get a little worn-out on the beer option. Plus, you still can't drink the water, unless it's bottled, so beer's the one.

Possible, but I doubt it. He's a good soldier, as such, he obeys his commands.
But it would get ugly if he starts to sing like a canary (that would sound bad too).

if and when it comes it will not be called a draft it will be called Patriot Opportunty Act or something like that. 18 year olds will have the option of enlisting or having there driver license suspended, there are ways to have a draft and not call it a draft LOL

Never happen. Cranus the anus is way too much of a sissyboy, hide

My "ID" ? What ID are you talking about? Like a drivers license?

Notice to AKC (aka Ass Kisser Coalition):

Apparently this dicklicker hasn't been paying attention.
see news:2vt604F2q81qgU1@uni-berlin.de

If you're too retarded to know how to open that link, try this one ->
http://groups.google.com/groups?q=%22(much+like+you,+sock+puppet)%22&hl=en&lr=&selm=2u4usj
F25qshfU1%40uni-berlin.de&rnum=1

And if you're _still_ too retarded to know how to use google, I'll just quote that here:

<quote>
I don't hide behind a remailer. I use individual.net's server because road runner's news servers suck @$$ (much like you, sock puppet).

I don't have a need to hide from anyone at all including the likes of you, dill-f~ck. I'm here in Saint Petersburg, Florida. If you're interested in "finding" me, just send me an email (dr.x [at] vpndns.com) and I'll be more than happy to tell you exactly where I am, although I have a feeling you are too much of a pu$$y to come down here to make all your gay references face to face.
</quote>

So if the Ass Kisser Coalition and all the sock puppets want to find me, you know where I am.

There's only 2 resons I can think of for an ass wipe like yourself to want my "ID". That would be to either hunt me down (wich I really hope that's the reason), or to report me to my ISP.

I'll help you out even more. If it's to hunt me down, I already told you how to get a hold of me. Send me an email and I'll tell you where we can meet.

If it's to report me, then I'll help you with that too. You can report me to my ISP (abuse AT tampabay.rr.com) or if you really want to make a big stink, you can contact those that accually pay for my connection (abuse AT vpndns.com) and convince them to pull my plug. Either way, I think you'll be too much of a pussy to even respond since you didn't respond to me the first time you stomped your feet and held your breath about me using individual.net's news service.

If you read the article, the range of the missile is 6000 miles.

Quote:
"Topol-Ms have been deployed in silos since 1998. The missiles have a range of about 6,000 miles and reportedly can maneuver in ways that are difficult to detect.
Earlier this year, a senior Defense Ministry official was quoted as telling news agencies that Russia had developed a weapon that could make the United States' proposed missile-defense system useless."

I don't think Afghanistan is the primary mission for the weapon.

You may be correct (I'm hoping you're not), however I feel that they know the U.S. isn't their problem. We aren't! At least not as of the last time I heard any news of U.S. and Russia muttered in the same breath. I think they're just doing a bit more than we did post 9/11. First they had that Theatre incident and now the school - what, about a year apart? ALL innocent people. I believe they're just reacting a bit differently. "IF" they are intending on going after those gutless cowards, then I'm behind them 100 %. Man, if Russia and the U.S. both buddied up and "really" went after them - WOW. There would be rivers of brown - probably mixed with a lot of red. The shit would be running down their pants and out into the streets. We ALL have to quit playing games. NO RULES. JUST KICK ASS.

I'd be a bit more concerned about Iran (not forgetting North Korea) - rather than Russia. They're the ones with the Psychos in charge. Most of our problems lately have arisen from the Sand Nations of the world. IF it weren't for all the oil, I'd say to hell with them, eliminate them all or not deal with them. They claim to be our friends yet they're the ones acting as cock roaches and attacking. IF they were our friends, then they would take any and all steps to wipe out those among them responsible. With all the money they're getting for oil, they can't say they can't afford to. I think they've all been out in the sun too long, their brains are fried.

I say use whatever tactics are necessary to wipe the scum out - once and for all. Take no prisoners. Make the (only) rule - stop or die. No exceptions. These scum bags play by no rules, we need to adapt to their way of playing by no rules. They're using our system of playing by rules - against us. That is our weakness. Eliminate the rules as they have, take off the gloves and I can bet - they'll stop in their tracks. As I said - STOP OR DIE. Most of them are dumb enough to want to die anyway, so - fine - shoot the scum. Do them the favor. Do us all a favor. Eradicate the scum from the world. These gutless bastards aren't human. They're animals. RABID animals. They need and deserve to be put down. As for the French and the rest, they need to recollect their balls and get in the system of defense. The first time they cower down, they're history. To cower down to this scum is to have no balls. That scum will pick up that fumble and run with it. That's what they hope for. That pumps them up even more. Russia doesn't seem to be too willing to allow anymore of that crap to happen in their country. Russia is showing they still have balls. My hat is off to RUSSIA!

Ever think that the Russians are developing new nuclear missiles because the US of A will be implementing a new missile 'defence' system?

Looks to me like Bush has just started another arms race.

You betcha! Kill all dem ragheads and let God sort 'em out! Sure, some innocent people will get in the way. But hey, why worry about thirty-, forty-, or even a hundred-thousand civilians if you can vaporize a couple hundred terrorists in the process?

Absolutely! Just because they look like humans, walk like humans,

English either!

The heck with that! Why wait for the Russians to rebuild their military? Just nuke them too! After all, they used to be a bunch of inhuman commie bastards that couldn't speak English, so just waste them all before they turn communist again!

Hi All;
I wound up with this CB amp in a estate deal. I have no use for it and info is hardly available.
The wiring is terrible, I wonder if it was garage built?
Anyway, it uses 2-20LF6 tubes, I have not turned it on at all and do not intend to either:-)
I am selling it for parts, a rebuild, etc. as most of these were abused and I don't want to "marry" it, just move it to someone who can use it or repair it if need be!
The Cabinet is nice, not used it years it seems.
Price is $40 + UPS(22 lbs from 11758)

When I read your response I said, "Oh no". I was thinking that I had mad an expensive mistake. However, it is an ESP2. I am glad it was just a typing mistake instead a purchase mistake. (g)

I soldered a diode into the B position and started twisting the dial. Every time I started from, say channel 1, the next time I rotated the dial to channel 1 again I was still on the normal channel 1.

Got any Ideas?

I'm not familiar with that particular Midland model. I'll assume you are using a freq counter to confirm that the mod does not work as the mod states it will not show on the LCD which band you are on. Also check to make sure that the diode is not reversed and no bridged solder joints. Other than that I haven't a clue. Good luck.

Hello, Dan

Nukes to use against Bin Laden? Now think for a moment (if this is possible). Russia saw us go into Afghanistan with cruise missiles (which can be fitted with nuclear warheads) and then attack Iraq (which, it turns out, had no weapons of mass destruction). We have a religious man saying on television that we don't want geeks in Washington, we want Rambos. Yesterday (or was it the day before) they tested a scram jet at mach 10. 7000 miles per hour. The intent is to design a new jet for our military that can take off from inside the lower 48 states and attack any target in the world in two hours or less.

Perhaps Russia figures they need more ICBMs that can reach a target in 90 minutes. I'm betting they are scared of us and we will be the pretargeted area in their arsenal.

Do you feel much safer now?

Perhaps our kids and grandkids can practice ducking underneath their school desks like I did (in case of nuclear attack).

Aren't you happy that we are so safe with Rambos in charge in Washington?

BTW, the dollar is still falling and congress is going to raise the debt limit. Oh, and I see the Republicans have changed the rules to protect the majority leader's position when he gets indicted.

Don'tcha just feel safe and happy?

Don't whine to me; I didn't vote for the corrupt administration. Oh - I almost forgot. Did you see the article on a number of dangerous drugs that the FDA previously approved and is now ignoring?

http://dailynews.att.net/cgi-bin/news?e=pub&dt=041118&cat=news&st=newsd86eiub00&src=ap

Feel good?

What is conservative about a president running us into debt that our grandchildren will not be able to pay off?

The danger is not Russia; it is Washington.

Best regards from Rochester, NY

It has been brought to our attention that we are loosing a lot of customers and bidders because we leave the bidders and buyers ID private on our amplifier auctions. So let me explain our reasons for this.

We have had a few people in the past that think it is there business to police my auctions and to police what I do - and to e-mail bidders and customers with harrasing e-mails. Telling them if they continue to bid or buy an amplfier they are going to get turned into the FCC

They e-mail the bidders and then the winners - they tell the winners
"You have purchased an illegal item and your name and the item hav been forwarded to the FCC and you are going to go to jail" So to eliminate these e-mails we have choosen to keep the bidders and buyers private. This way I am the only one to receive the e-mails. And I in turn answer them and forward them to eBay.

I will say the people that do this - lets call the the eBay police - are ashamed and keep their ID's private - usually with a 0 feedback and an ID that they only us for this purpose. I have also now found out that by responding to these people and making their comments public along with my ansers it has stopped a lot more of this.

So I want to assure you that there is nothing under handed going on - it is just to protect you the customer.ï¿½

Maybe and probably I don't have all the answers or the right ones, but my bone of contention is - that we need to defend our country at any cost. AND to NOT play by any "rules". The others could give a shit less about the Geneva Convention, so why the hell should we? They use our respect of it, as a sign of weakness and play on it.

Sec. 95.408 (CB Rule 8) How high may I put my antenna?

(a) Antenna means the radiating system (for transmitting, receiving or both) and the structure holding it up (tower, pole or mast). It also means everything else attached to the radiating system and the structure.
(b) If your antenna is mounted on a hand-held portable unit, none of the following limitations apply.
(c) If your antenna is installed at a fixed location, it (whether receiving, transmitting or both) must comply with either one of the following:

(1) The highest point must not be more than 6.10 meters (20 feet) higher than the highest point of the building or tree on which it is mounted; or
(2) The highest point must not be more than 18.3 meters (60 feet) above the ground.
(d) If your CB station is located near an airport, and if you antenna structure is more than 6.1 meters (20 feet) high, you may have to obey additional restrictions. The highest point of your antenna must not exceed one meter above the airport elevation for every hundred meters of distance from the nearest point of the nearest airport runway.
Differences in ground elevation between your antenna and the airport runway may complicate this formula. If your CB station is near an airport, you may contact the nearest FCC field office for a worksheet to help you figure the maximum allowable height of your antenna. Consult part 17 of the FCC's Rules for more information.

Warning: Installation and removal of CB station antennas near powerlines is dangerous. For your safety, follow the installation directions included with your antenna.

Sec. 95.409 (CB Rule 9) What equipment may I use at my CB station?

(a) You must use an FCC certificated CB transmitter at your CB station. You can identify an FCC certificated transmitter by the certification label placed on it by the manufacturer. You may examine a list of certificated equipment at any FCC Field Office or at FCC Headquarters. Use of a transmitter which is not FCC certificated voids your authority to operate the station.
(b) You must not make, or have made, any internal modification to a certificated CB transmitter. (See CB Rule 25, Sec. 95.425). Any internal modification to a certificated CB transmitter cancels the certification, and use of such a transmitter voids your authority to operate the station.

(1) External radio frequency (RF) power amplifiers (sometimes called linears or linear amplifiers); or
(2) Any other devices which, when used with a radio transmitter as a without codes or coded messages. Operating signals such as ``ten codes'' are not considered codes or coded messages. You may transmit two-way plain language communications only to other CB stations, to units of your own CB station or to authorized government stations on CB frequencies about--

(1) Your personal or business activities or those of members of your

(b) You may use your CB station to transmit a tone signal only when the signal is used to make contact or to continue communications. (Examples of circuits using these signals are tone operated squelch and selective calling circuits.) If the signal is an audible tone, it must last no longer than 15 seconds at one time. If the signal is a subaudible tone, it may be transmitted continuously only as long as you are talking.

That "any cost" phrase is the problem. The US is founded on some basic priciples, such as human equality and unalienable rights. If the cost of our security requires the sacrifice of those principles then we are effectively destroying our own country. Please read this speech:

http://www.georgesoros.com/index.cfm?Fuseaction=SpeechHTML

> AND
>to NOT play by any "rules". The others could give a shit less about the >Geneva Convention, so why the hell should we?

Because we are not them. If we are going to justify any war against uncivilized people then we MUST be more civilized than them.

> They use our respect of it, as >a sign of weakness and play on it.

They play on our fears. They play on our horror of watching someone being beheaded. They play on our respect of human life and civil rights. They play on anything they can, and if we start violating the Geneva Convention (like we did at Abu-Graid) then they will play on that, too -- in fact, that's exactly what they did.

They WANT us to stoop to their level, to fight without regard to the rules. Because when we do it justifies their own use of such tactics.
And then they can proudly proclaim to the world, "Look at the US, the world's greatest superpower! Look how they commit the same crimes they condemn! The world can no longer deny American hypocrisy!" And that is the rally cry for everyone who has been victimized by America to take up arms against the US, and wage war by any means they wish.

Not a pleasant picture, and certainly NOT a positive step towards our security.

The root of hatred against the US is several decades of bad policies in the region. We effectively created these terrorists. If we want to defeat them we must FIRST change the policies that cause the hatred and therefore prevent the creation of more terrorists. THEN we can hunt down the remaining terrorists with the assurance that more won't pop up to take their places. That's a much better plan than nuking half the planet. And much more civilized, too.

3332. OT: Kerry's service record -- the FACTS

Newsgroup: rec.radio.cb
Date: 2004-11-19 13:31:22 UTC
From: Frank Gilliland <w&#65533;renut@NOSPAM&#65533;cehouse.net>
Message-ID: <18trp013j33kpckhq5t0jbfmaito4mo0ve@4ax.com>
Source record: 190694

In order to sort out this disorganized mess of documents you need a frame of reference which can be found here:

www.johnkerry.com/pdf/jkmilservice/Service_Record.pdf

Now from that document you can chronologically piece together the records available from Kerry's own website (I'll be darned if I can figure out why he put them in alphabetical order, but he did, and that's that). Anyway, I won't bother with the undisputed portions and move right to the parts where kooks like Dave are making their fuss:

* Release from ACDU [active duty]/
Trf [transferred] to Naval Reserve, 3 January 1970

www.johnkerry.com/pdf/jkmilservice/DD214.pdf Page #2

Character of Service: Honorable. The only issue I see with this document is the claim about the Combat "V" not being given with a Silver Star. I don't know if that's true, but even if it is then the error is easily attributable to a typo (previous 'Bronze Star with Combat "V"' line accidently read twice, or just a brain-fart) made by the office-jockey who copied it from the source document. I've made similar mistakes myself many times. Nothing sinister here.

The above document was amended in 2001:

www.johnkerry.com/pdf/jkmilservice/DD-215_Correction.pdf

This is an amendment to a previous document, NOT a discharge. Notice that the only change it made was to his awards (Sec. 24). No change was made to his character of service.

* Trf [transferred] to Standby Reserve - Inactive, 1 July 1972

www.johnkerry.com/pdf/jkmilservice/Transfer_To_Standby_Reserve.pdf

This was a voluntary extention of his inactive service. I see after reading some of those paranoid websites that there is an issue with the document ending in a colon (....naw, I'll leave that alone). The document ends, "....for retirement point credit if you:" That has led to some speculation that there is a missing page, or that something was deleted. But if you look in the space below the last paragraph you can see what appears to be a stamping. The document was copied with a high-contrast b/w copier, so the stamping was probably a light color and didn't carry through to the copy very well. Yet you can tweak the contrast a bit and see that the first word is "FINISH", and that there are at least a couple more words following it. It very likely says something in reference to the 20-year duty requirement for retirement.

Perhaps, "FINISH 20 YEARS OF DUTY", or something like that. The only way to know for sure what it says is to get a better copy. Regardless, there isn't any evidence of an intentional omission or deletion.

* Discharged for U. S. Naval Reserve, 16 February 1978

www.johnkerry.com/pdf/jkmilservice/Honorable_Discharge_From_Reserve.pdf

This document ended his military obligation. Notice the header:

"Encl: (1) Honorable Discharge Certificate"

Fact: All of the records indicate John Kerry's character of service was nothing less than honorable. There are no incongruities, deletions, omissions or errors that would suggest otherwise.

And as for all you right-wing paranoid conspiracy theorists, you might have better luck chasing UFOs.

Oh, I get it, it's an INSULT NEWS GROUP - which is what usually populates this news group! As to that poster, sorry, I didn't take notice of that, since it wasn't just an insult. I actually passed it off as perhaps worth reading. If you're going to turn one in, you better sharpen your pencil, because there is a hell of a lot here that would constitute as spam. ALL the insults which have no relevancy to topic for starters. Boy, you have enough to keep you busy for a LONG time. And - any one of them could always come back to bite you in the ass - one way or another. You don't have a clue of who you deal with on here.

I think you're fighting a losing battle..... Kick back, relax and uh - since I see you're supposedly a female, don't let this get your panties all bunched up.

Actually, I think you'll be hard pressed to prove anything - since I believe this is an "unmoderated" newsgroup and many ISPs could give a crap less.

Brainiac? WOW - I'm impressed. Have a nice day Ms. Julie. I'll stay clear of your broom. Just make sure you fly high enough.

When the enemy comes calling again, you go hide in your pit (in your momma's panties) - the rest of us will cover your ass. Actually, the best idea would be to offer you up as a sacrifice.

We're talking about the defense of our country, if you don't agree, then you're a part of the problem, not the solution. There is a statement of "Lead - follow - or get out of the way". Do us all a favor since you don't feel we need to do the utmost to protect our people. GET THE HELL OUT OF THE WAY. I will not back down from my feelings of what is needed to protect this country. NEVER. These ignorant bastards kill innocent children - men and women. They do not pick military targets. THEY NEED ANNIHILATED. With your attitude, may they pick you next.

3335. Bush to blue states: Deal with your OWN nuclear waste.

No more nuclear waste dumping in Nevada or Utah; instead, the big waste producing states like New York will be forced to deal with their own shit instead of shipping it off to those backward bastards in the red states.

Winning is soooooooooooooooooooooooo good!

Your reaction is one that is clearly based on fear. It's not a bad thing to admit fear -- on the contrary, there is a proverb that goes something like, "Courage is fear that has said its prayers". But if you let that fear control you then the terrorists have already claimed you as their victim.

Right. Torture and murder of innocents, inluding women, children, and the bombing of civilian targets should be condoned and accepted practice in the military, eh?

The only weakness was and is in the intelligence level of the current

>When the enemy comes calling again,

you go

>hide in your pit (in your momma's panties) -

>the rest of us will cover your ass.

"Us'? You aren't in the military, so you willbe doing nothing of the sort.
Nevertheless, you can't even define the enemy, let alone invoke some generic phrase "when the enemy comes calling again". Again, Iraq didn't attack us and the 911 Report clearly illustrates NO connection between Iraq and 911.
And before you go crying and invoking "But Iraq supported terrorist groups", let me inform you, so does/did every other country on earth.

>Actually, the best idea would be to offer you >up as a sacrifice.

That's the Hitleresque view.....get rid of anyone's opinion that may differ from your own.

>We're talking about the defense of our >country,

Once again,,,Iraq didn't attack us.

>if you don't agree, then you're a part of the >problem, not the solution.

To be fair, delusions that you are somehow protecting this country by not even being in the military but attacking those with views other than the one you hold is fair entertainment.

>There is a statement of "Lead - follow - or get

Which effectively appears to have made the world leave the US and its angry, warmongering republican leaders, alone and all by themself.

Too bad you are unable to distinguish those strong feelings from factual accounts.

So does Malaysia, Singapore, the Ivory Coast, China, Phillipines, parts of SA, Chad, parts of the Sudan, Iran, N, Korea,,,in fact,,,why don;t you educate yourself via Amnesty International for an enlightenment. It will open your eyes for which countries has the worst human abuse and rights record. In fact, going solely on your statement above, it clearly illustrates such has nothing at all to do with the invasion.

That's right. Wrap yourself in the flag and call your nazi ass a patriot when wishing death upon your fellow American for daring to exercise his American-born rights protected by law and what this country was founded upon: The freedom of speech and right to publicly dissent without fear of penalty.

PUBLIC SERVICE: HAMS QUIT TOURNAMENT OF ROSES PARADE - LIMIT SERVICE TO ATV

Ham radio will not be a major part of the 2005 Tournament of Roses Parade. Amateur Radio Newsline's Norm Seeley, KI7UP has the rest of the story:

Although it was never officially part of the Tournament of Roses, ham radio has been providing a communications link along the Rose Parade route for more than 40 years. And long before there was any official group, people like Tom O'Hara, W6ORG, of P-C Electronics were the early pioneers:

--

O'Hara: "I first got involved with the Rose Parade
communications
when I was one of the Emergency Coordinators for Pasadena. They asked us ti help out with some longer range stuff than what the CB operators were doing. This was in the middle 1960's."

--

Using video cameras and Amateur television, the ham radio volunteers were ever alert for any kind of an emergency situation that might develop. If they spotted something they would send their pictures back to the parade coordinator who could then take the necessary action.

O'Hara: "Later on they added more and more ATV and more and more hams. At one time I think there were 17 camera positions."

Amateur Radio literally pioneered the use of closed circuit television for coordinating large scale events in the Tournament of Roses Parade. At one time hams even had Amateur Television transmitters sending back pictures from helicopters flying overhead. And they did this long before most television stations had camera equipped news choppers of their own.

--

O Hara: "Got involved with the helicopter with the first ATV in 1968. Put it in the Sheriff's helicopter. And when I got my own helicopter I put it in and flew around one year."

--

As the parade grew, so did the Amateur Radio communications effort. By the 1970's TORRA had unofficially been formed. TORRA stands for Tournament of Roses Radio Amateurs and in the 1980's the hams involved formalized as a club and with this came the golden days of ham radio supporting the parade.

Today TORRA has more than 300 active members who regularly volunteer their time. At least that's the way it had been until an incident occurred last year. That's when an incident took place that apparently caused things to go sour.

According to an article in the Pasadena Star News, a pair of ham radio operators were carrying equipment onto the grounds of Tournament House in preparation for the last parade. They were stopped by a senior Tournament official and their presence challenged. The unnamed official even went so far as to accuse the ham radio volunteers of lying to get on the grounds.

Now enter Nextel. The same Nextel that has patented the words push-to-talk.

Nextel is a corporate sponsor of the 2005 parade, and reportedly has donated a number of phones to the event. This means that most Tournament of Roses officials will have a Nextel phone with direct walkie-talkie service in their pockets.

Bill Flinn is the Tournament's chief operating officer. Talking about Amateur Radio's departure he was quoted by Pasadena Star News as saying: "I think it's come to the end of a run. We are sorry to see them go."

But depending on the Nextel walkie-talkie phones as a primary form of communications could turn out to be a mistake for the parade and those that run it. Unlike hams, parade officials and their corps of volunteers are not trained communicators. Rather they have been used to handing a message to a ham radio operator and having an answer appear. Most are likely unaware that they will have to contend with numerous people calling at the same time. All with priority traffic and all demanding immediate answers.

With their years of experience, the hams were the buffers who learned how to work around these problems. But the cellphone provider is coming in cold with no experience in this specialized communications area. There will likely be no experienced net control stations and no way to prioritize needs.

On Thursday, November 18th, as this report was being prepared, we received a copy of a letter from TORRA Chair Jeanne Nordland, WD6BWN, thats being sent to all of the groups members. It confirms that hams will not be providing voice communications in 2005, but that A-T-V assistance to the parade will continue as it has in years past.

But ATV is only one part of the equation. the question still remains as to whether or not the Nextel phones can take the place of the hams and a structured voice communications network. This is something that nobody will really know until January 1st of 2005. That's when the drama will be played out live to the world on their livingroom T-V screens -- on New Years Day. And likely, 10's of millions of people will be watching.

For the Amateur Radio Newsline, I'm Norm Seeley, KI7UP, reporting.

As Norm said, these days the Tournament of Roses Amateur Radio group currently has about 300 members. How many might return if they are asked back in 2006 is really, anyones guess.

THE BPL FIGHT: FCC ISSUES ERATTUM ON BPL R&O

The FCC has issued whats known as an Notice of Erratum. One that slightly modifys its Report and Order on the introduction of Broadband Over Powerline operations.

Two changes were made. First in Section 15.15 under General Technical Requirements section B now reads: "Except as follows, an intentional or unintentional radiator must be constructed such that the adjustments of any control that is readily accessible by or intended to be accessible to the user will not cause operation of the device in violation of the regulations. Access BPL equipment shall comply with the applicable standards at the control adjustment that is employed. The measurement report used in support of an application for Certification and the user instructions for Access BPL equipment shall clearly specify the user- or installer-control settings that are required for conformance with these regulations."

Also, Section 15.31 is amended by revising a paragraph under Measurement standards to read:
"Measurements shall be performed at a sufficient number of radials around the equipment under test to determine the radial at which the field strength values of the radiated emissions are maximized. The maximum field strength at the frequency being measured shall be reported in the equipment authorization report. This paragraph shall not apply to Access BPL equipment on overhead medium voltage lines. In lieu thereof, the measurement guidelines established by the Commission for Access BPL shall be followed."
While these changes may seem as minor right now, they could impact ham radio and other services in the future. This, when and if B-P-L ever becomes a major player in the area of direct to home high speed Internet access. (FCC)

THE BPL FIGHT: ITS NOT BPL IN WESTERN VK

Meantime, some good news on the B-P-L front from down-under. Word that interference being heard by hams in Western Australia is not coming from a powerline broadband installation. The problem is that nobody is sure exactly what the source is. W-I-A newsman Dennis Muldownie, VK6KAD, is in Redcliff with more:

One of the rumors persisting in VK6 is that our power authority is running BPL. This has been denied several times. I may have found the source of these rumors, as I have stumbled across a website dating back to 2002, in which the testing of Broadband by the power company was mentioned.

However it was not BPL technology. There is an ongoing project here to "rewire" the West by placing low voltage and some higher tension feeders underground. This is - or was - progressing slowly. It improves the street-scape out of sight and reduces the potential for damage in bad weather. In providing these services apparently optical fiber cable was also placed in the trench, and the Broadband was under test on the fiber. Not you will note on BPL.

Very little of WA was ever wired by Cable as in Sydney and Melbourne for Cable TV, and therefore Cable Modems are not an option. The way is clear for the power authority to provide such services by Fiber as it replaces the overhead with underground. I have not found out what the tests revealed.

And having said all that, I am finding excessive noise in isolated pockets on the AM Broadcast band, from power lines in my area. I suspect the approved items used on Power lines obtainable from many outlets are not as bullet proof as we would like to suspect...

The saga continues.

The saga does indeed continue and Dennis is one of those at the forefront of the search. (WIA News)

RADIO AND THE LAW: CLUBS AND THE FCC

Still with legal issues, for a group to be eligible for a club callsign, the FCC has four criteria thar must be met. It says that a club must be made up of at least four members, have a name and legal document of organization and a primary purpose of being devoted to Amateur Radio activities consistent with FCC rules. But do you know how many of the members of a radio club need to hold ham radio licenses?

These and many other questions are answered by former FCC rules Chief John B. Johnston, W3BE, in an article titled "What Is a Club" appearing in the just out December issue of Worldradio Magazine. And filling close to two pages, Johnston explains in great detail the recognition given clubs by the regulatory agency and the rules regarding club call signs.

If you have ever had questions regarding radio clubs and their dealings with the FCC, this is the tell all definitive article you have been waiting for. More about subscribing to Worldradio and sample issues is on-line at www.wr6wr.com

And less we forget, the answer to how many members of a radio club must hold a valid FCC issued ham radio license is only one. The rules say that at least one member must have an operator and primary station grant from the agency to apply for a club station license. (Worldradio)

RESCUE RADIO: US COAST GUARD AUXILIARY SEEKS RADIO AMATEURS

The ARRL Letter says that the U-S Coast Guard Auxiliary is looking for Amateur Radio operators or prospective amateur licensees. Amateur Radio Newsline's Bruce Tennant, K6PZW, has more:

Wayne Spivak, KC2NJV, is with the Coast Guard's National Public Affairs Department. He says that because the service operates every day, in good weather and in bad, that the U-S Coast Guard Auxiliary is on the air whether there is power to operate or not. And at times like these, the Coast Guard and the Auxiliary rely on the Auxiliary Net as a backup radio network. In areas with a large U-S Coast Guard presence, the AuxNet operates in both a support and backup capacity. More important, in regions where there is no regular Coast Guard presence, the Auxiliary may rely solely on its AuxNet for communication.

And because of this, Spivak says the Coast Guard Auxiliary is seeking ham radio volunteers. He says that this is because amateurs are good communicators. That they have developed both in everyday radio operation and participation during emergencies through RACES, ARES and SKYWARN.

Spivak believes that Amateur Radio and the U-S Coast Guard Auxiliary are an ideal fit. He says that the US Coast Guard Auxiliary is open to all US citizens over the age of 17. A security background check, paid for by the US Coast Guard, is required before an applicant is accepted. If you are interested in expanding your public service horizons, please visit the US Coast Guard Auxiliary Web site. Its in cyberspacw at www.cgaux.org. Again, that U-R-L is www.cgaux.org and I'm Bruce Tennant, K6PZW, reporting for the Amateur Radio Newsline.

RESCUE RADIO : MARITIME MOBILES SERVICES NET NOW STREAMING AUDIO

The sound of the daily Maritime Mobile Service Net can now be heard in streaming audio on the Internet.

The net meets daily on 14.300 MHz between 16:00 UTC and 03:00 UTC. The audio streaming originates from the receive site of W-L-O Marine Radio in Mobile, Alabama using a Japan Radio Company N-R-D 535 D receiver fed from a T-C-I ground mounted loop antenna.

As with any streaming audio on the Internet, there will be an inherent lag from the time its encoded in Alabama and when you hear it on your computer. In this case the delay could be anywhere from 4 seconds to 1 minute, as compared to live on-the-air audio.

Because of this, this streamed audio is not meant to be used to control the net. Rather, it is intended as another means for non hams to listen to the net, family of boat crews to listen for the boat and a way to monitor the net when you are away from the radio or when you have no propagation to hear the net control station.

You can hear the streamed audio daily when the net is in operation. You will need a media player like Winamp or Real installed on your computer. Simply take your web browser to www.mmsn.org and click on the yellow icon that says "Listen Live." (MMSN)

ENFORCEMEMT: CBS PROTESTS JACKSON WARDROBE MALFUNCTION FINE

Viacom Corporation, the parent of the CBS network says the FCC's proposed 550-thousand-dollar fine for Janet Jackson's Super Bowl "wardrobe malfunction" is "entirely illogical." Viacom says neither it nor anyone at CBS knew Justin Timberlake would yank off a piece of Jackson's black leather top.

The move exposed Jackson's right breast for less than a second, but generated a-half (m) million complaints to the Federal Communications Commission. The fine is the largest ever imposed against a T-V outlet. Viacom is seeking to have it rescinded and has indicated that it will fight the matter in the Federal courts. (Published news reports)

ENFORCEMENT: WLFK-LP ADMONISHED FOR BROADCASTING ADVERTISEMENTS

Low Power FM stations are prohibited from broadcasting advertisements by the Communications Act of 1934 and by the FCC's own rules. And doing so has brought a letter of admonishment to a Wisconsin based LPFM station.

This hand-slap went to WLFK-LP and is looked at as a fair warning to all Low Power F-M stations not to broadcast commercial advertisements. A letter of admonishment carries a warning to cease and desist but no punitive action such as a fine. More is on-line at http://hraunfoss.fcc.gov/edocs_public/attachmatch/DA-04-3555A1.doc (FCC)

TELECOMMUNICATIONS LAW: SPAMMER BOUNTY SUGGESTED BY FTC

The U.S. Federal Trade Commission has given its endorsement to a plan that would reward insiders for information leading to the arrest and conviction of people or companies that produce spam. In a recent report the FTC said that some anti-spam proposals, such as a "Do Not Spam" list similar to the agency's highly successful "Do Not Call" list, would not work and could make spam worse. But the agency said that providing monetary rewards for turning in spammers could work in some cases. The FTC is suggesting rewards ranging from $100,000 to $250,000 to turn spammers in. (FTC)

NAMES IN THE NEWS: A FLY-IN TO HONOR K9TRG

He served the ham radio community for years, especially in the early days of F-M. And on Veterans Day, Thursday, November 11th, some nineteen hams from around the nation gathered at a restaurant in Suburban Chicago to honor their friend Art Householder, K9TRG, of Spectronics fame.

If you operated F-M in the 1960's or 1970's using radios like a Motorola 80 D or a General Electric Progress Line, then the name Art Householder and the call sign K9TRG has to ring a bell. Back when F-M was in its infancy, Art was the premiere supplier of decommissioned police and taxi dispatch radios to the growing world of Amateur Radio F-M.

Now retired and in declining health, he cannot travel as he used to. So this year his friends came to the Rose Garden restaurant in Elkgrove, Illinois to spend the day with him.

And the list reads like a whose' who of ham radio including such notables as Evelyn Garrison, WS7A, who came from Washington State and F-M pioneer Dick McKay, K6VGP, of Los Angeles. From the Chicago area ATV pioneer Henry Rue, AA9XW, the FCC's Russell "Joe" Moonie and RAIN producer Hap Holly, KC9RP, were among those sharing the day with .

While the luncheon is held every Thursday, this was notable event for Art because of the number of people who either took time off from work or traveled thousands of miles to attend. And many say that they plan to do it again next year. (KC9RP)

RADIO LAW FOLLOW-UP: COURT ORDER ON PET CHIPS THAT CAN'T BE READ

Remember our story a few months ago about a particular pet identification transponder chip that were not compatible with most scanners in use in the United States? Well, it took some time but a judge now barred a company from selling or advertising these microchips.

The preliminary injunction from San Diego Superior Court Judge William C. Pate yesterday blocks several named defendants from selling or advertising its unit called "Recovery Chip," If and when the company wants to resume selling or promoting the Recovery Chip product, the court must first approve the company's proposed advertisements. Also, any new ads must disclose that the Recovery Chip cannot be read by the majority of microchip scanners in U.S. shelters.

Banfield, the Pet Hospital has been the U.S. distributor of the particular per I-D chip. It is based in Portland, Oregon and operates in Pets Mart stores throughout the United States. Banfield voluntarily suspended microchip sales in early May, before the lawsuit was filed, and has no immediate plans to resume its microchip program. (Published news reports)

His callsign is 9V1CW, and Enno says that he will be in Singapore for about 3 years. All QSLs via PA0KHS direct or via the bureau. (OPDX)

And word that N3SIG has been redeployed to McMurdo Station in Antarctica. Chris says that he expects to be there until March 5th. Thats the good news. The bad comes in a report that says the ham shack's antennas there were destroyed, and there us also damage to the main HF rig. So he plans to hand carry a HF rig from his home in Pennsylvania to Antarctica. When he arrives, Chris says that he will construct a dipole and will be on the air as N3SIG stroke KC4. Listen for him mainly on 14 dot 243 MHz which is the unofficial Antarctica ham radio calling frequency. (OPDX)

Lastly, a real rare one with word that Christmas Island as VK9XG will be active from the 22nd of November until the 8th of December. The station will be operated by W0YG and W0MY and will be operational in the CQ world wide CW contest plus a much-needed RTTY activation on 40, 80 and 160 meters. QSL this one as directed on the air. THAT FINAL ITEM: THE BAGDHAD REMOTE BASE - REVISITED

Two weeks ago we reported that former 73 Magazine Editor Keith Lamonica, W7DXX, had arranged for the installation of a remotely controlled transceiver in Baghdad, Iraq. A transceiver whose functions could be controlled by hams world wide over the Internet.

Well, that announcement by W7DXX has created quite a stir in ham radio circles because of the armed conflict taking part in that nation. This has resulted in many questions from the ham radio community that Lamonica recently addressed in an interview with Rain's Hap Holly, KC9RP. W7DXX says that some hams don't spend the time to read whats in front of them:

Lamonica: "There has been a lot of activity, especially on the qrz.com site about the operation and people just don't take a breath and sit back and read the instructions. We have outlined everything that should satisfy anyones curiosity, but you still have people that just put their blinders on and go off to make wild statements."

--

Lamonica has lots more to say about the Baghdad remote and other uses of the Internet by ham radio. You can her it all on this weeks RAIN Report. Its on line in streaming audio at www.rainreport.com or on your phone at 847-827-7246. That number is easy to remember as 847-827-R-A-I-N. (ARNewsline(tm), RAIN)

There is one for sale on E-bay that says it has the 11 meter band.
How much power would it put out?

Another thought, test the diode, maybe it's bad or was damaged on install.

The Ranger is about 40w on AM, but I think you would fing tuning it up to be a hassle. Plus, you would still need a receiver. Finally, the Ranger is a bit of a "collectors" transmitter, so I would expect it to be a bit expensive.

Alright, I'll be a bit more polite. First of all, I "fear" NO ONE. OK? I'm talking the enemy here. I can only die once and we all die sometime. I'm just saying with all the whackos out there, we need to quit playing by "rules" and just kick ass. They play by no rules. So, we need to get down to their level and really whip their asses but good. Take no prisoners, show no mercy. If you're going to do the job, you may as well do it "RIGHT". They take advantage of our politeness. They do not care who they kill or how old. They are as rabid animals who need put to sleep - once and for all. Send all of them to Allah! That's what they keep talking about, so - give it to them! WE are engaged in two wars right now and those we're fighting do not play by any rules. The Geneva Convention means absolutely nothing to them. The stupid bastards probably can't even pronounce it. But - they kill and will keep killing - ANY ONE - young and old - civilian or military - and will do so until taken out - once and for all.

Fear does NOT control me. On the contrary, ANGER controls me, for the 3000 innocent people they killed. THAT - I will never forget. I am only looking out for the women and children of this country - OUR PEOPLE. If I "feared" - then "I" wouldn't be one of those in the front lines of defense to combat these ass holes. No sire ree bub, I'm right out there with some of the others doing my thing. Not in Afghanistan or Iraq or some other God forsaken hell hole (God bless those who are!), but right here on our own turf where they are still alive and crawling like the parasites they are. I'm one of those - constantly training for WMD response and so on. If you think these donkey dick sucking parasites gave up here, you're sadly mistaken. It's just a matter of time. They're like a thief in the night, cockroaches. They're out there. Problem is, we ARE vigilant. They're waiting for some one, anyone - to drop their guard.

FEAR? Non sense. It's called being on the ball so these donkey dick suckers won't have as much of a chance of pulling the same shit off - twice. One more thing, the fact that some of the other "wimps" folded to them, gives them more power. WE can not afford to fold to them. Nor will we. I don't agree with "all" of Bush's actions or policies, but he was right. You're either with us or against us. I JUST wish, we'd quit playing by the damned rules. Every one of those bastards need to die.

Now, if you want to go on thinking this is "Fear" talking, be my guest, nothing I say will convince you otherwise. I don't care to debate it any further. Think what you must and will. You're not my enemy. I just get pissed, when someone takes what looks to be a "soft" approach. Carry on!

Naw, he's just a little too gung-ho.....ok, he's irrationally pissed.
At this point there's no point trying to talk sense. After some time passes maybe he'll cool his jets long enough to realize that terrorism doesn't justify terrorism. Until then he's plonked.

But, he does have the right idea, just the wrong weapons. In several millennia, when we have weapons that target those with terroristic mindsets, maybe we can use his plan. Until then, we're stuck with trying to make the best of a bad situation.

I would like to think that in several millennia weapons will be obsolete.

The Johnson Ranger I covered 160 to 10 meters and had 11 meters included. The Johnson Ranger II covered 160 to 6 meters and did not have 11 meters on it. Obviously, the Ranger I was made in the early 50s before 11 meters was changed to the cb band.

I had a Johnson Ranger I as a kid. It was rated 75 watts cw and 65 watts am and had a 6146 final. The pi network would load virtually anything from bedsprings to ball point pen springs (yes, I loaded them to a nice cherry red as a test and had a good match). Ran the thing to a several hundred foot 8 gauge longwire and had no problems on any bands, including 160 meters.

You are correct that many of these old rigs are commanding far to high a price as a day-to-day rig. They are collectors items. I've seen Hallicrafters S-20Rs for sale with a starting price over $200.00. I wouldn't give you $50.00 for one of them. Very wide on receive, on the higher frequencies you fine tuned them by moving your hand closer to or further from the front panel. Especially on 15 meters and up.

I have a working, Courier Galaxy VI, similar to the 148 Fgtl except it has a gold faceplate, black knobs, and green frequency counter/digital display. In good condition, with minor scrapes from being mobile on the top and sides of the case. Manufactred in 1988. I am looking to trade it in exchange for a 148F. I have the original power cord, bracket, manual, and the box for it. I just miss not having my Cobra. If interested, please email me directly. I have pictures. Thanks! I will be listing it on eBay soon if I get no offers.

Hey Mr Brain,
It's "think" not "thing". And in your reply in the johnson ranger post, it's "too" not "to".

And if you ever care to compare work status, criminal records, public assistance, income levels or education levels with the lower 15% of repubs against the lower 15% of dems, I'll take your money ANY day.

Another arrogant democrat...seems that's all the party has left these days.

I don't think it's the Republicans so much as a certain demographic class that tends to favor Republicans. And I think they can read just fine. The problem is that they find it beneficial to lock Galileo in the dungeon and keep preaching their sanctimonious bullshit.

Nobody's "crying about Kerry". If people don't learn how they were duped in this election then those same deceptions will be successful again in the future -- perhaps to the detriment of the candidate that -you- support.

Nobody is suggesting anything of the sort. I'll repeat what I said before: I don't think Kerry would have made a good president and I didn't vote for him, but not for the slanderous reasons that the Bush propoganda machine unloaded on the public.

>there are more democrats than republicans and that means many democrats

A statistical spin: Not everyone who voted belongs to a political party. And the issue is not about political parties, it's about the lies made by Bush and his ardent supporters.

You're right about the errors in spelling. I'll have to get a spell chequer. The last few days have been hectic as I have been repairing my registry after a foul-up with a freeware program (should have known better).

As far as money, do you see how our U.S. dollar is doing? Didn't think so. LOL. The stock market is next.

As far as ethics, the Republicans make a big deal out of Clinton getting some oral sex in the oval office. Not right, but afterwards he did what most married men would do - he lied about it. I notice that the Republicans have changed the rules to protect the majority leader. At least they don't hide the fact that they are criminals. That said, I'm more concerned with the dollar and the unstable nuclear equation between North Korea, Iran, and now Russia.

Arrogant? Not me. I am deeply concerned for the younger generations and those to come. If you stop and think about that (nuclear weapons and the U.S. dollar), perhaps you will understand my concern.

With all due regards from Rochester, NY
Jim

Hello, Frank

Despite my errors in spelling (and I made a couple of dandies LOL), you have truly hit the nail on the head.

The agenda is to change the world to what they think everyone should be. Unfortunately for this country, they hit the buttons when they made abortion and gay marriage their platform. You can't take a stand against theirs and expect to win. Unfortunately, what most folks do not understand is those stands were made to get votes, nothing more. Now that Bush has done some cabinet cleaning, we'll get to see their true agenda.

To survive, you must repeat "pi is equal to 3 point zero". Now, send some money their way. You're in! ;)

Best regards from Rochester, NY
Jim

ps - I wasn't crazy about Kerry - I am deeply concerned with the Bush agenda. Any conservative voices or moderate voices are no longer in his cabinet. BTW, I don't think that true conservatives are happy with the debt either. So - what is his agenda? Stay tuned.

It was not high level plate modulation. I believe it was screen grid modulation .... but am unsure. It has been a lot of years; AM is really obsolete - even more so than CW.

Bush simply pushed buttons against abortion and gay marriage. He won via those votes and is now going to pursue his own agenda.

As to who is wrong, only time will tell. I hope I am wrong. I sincerely do. His push for a nice tidy George Bush world (no, not to rule it, simply everyone acts his way) will either result in a truly wonderful world or, much more likely, Armageddon.

Best of luck from Rochester, NY

I really don't think that's Bush's agenda at all. I think his intentions are more self-serving, and that he sucked up to the conservative Christians -only- because he knew that the support of such a large demographic group could put him in office. If that's the case then there are two seperate issues here:

Bush may be in it for oil, reparations for his failed businesses, making his daddy proud, or maybe something else. Heck, he's daffy enough that he might just be working on his resume to become the commissioner of baseball (not so far fetched when you look at his history and pre-2000 quotes). The only thing I know for sure is that he doesn't see himself as a public servant. Regardless, we'll be done with him and his Vulcans eventually.

Now the -scary- part is the suprisingly large public support for imposing religious values onto the public. This time it was gay marriage. Over a hundred years ago it was polygamy in Utah. At that time the Supreme Court declared that the government had "a perfect right to prohibit polygamy and all other open offenses against the enlightened sentiment of mankind, NOTWITHSTANDING the pretense of religious convictions by which they may be advocated and practiced."
IOW, the religious conviction of either side was not a factor in their decision to prohibit polygamy, nor should it have been because of the First Amendment. Instead, the law was decided based on the "elightened sentiment of mankind."

Even though we claim to be an "enlightened" society, there are so many people who are unwilling to accept that the "sentiment" regarding gay marriage is changing. Sentiments towards social and moral issues have been changing since the origin of mankind, and will continue to change in the future -despite- the convictions of the self-proclaimed and religion-based 'moral majority'. If our society can't accept change then our growth is stunted, religion overthrows the government, and we plunge ourselves back into the dark ages.

People MUST learn to balance their emotions with logic. If they don't then they become the puppets for power-mongers like Bush who construct their entire campaigns to manipulate our emotional responses. That's not a very good way to choose the most powerful leader in the world.

Howdy! I've seen CB radios that have SSB as well. However, I don't understand this very well. That is, what exactly can you do with SSB? How far does it reach out? What kind of license do you need to use it? What kind of range do you get with a mobile unit? A base unit? I know these are a lot of questions; however, I would appreciate your views and information. Always, Karl

SSB is a type of modulation, like AM and FM. Most CB radios use AM only.

SSB uses half the bandwidth, so you can cram two SSB 'channels' into the space of one AM channel. Those SSB channels actually use the same channel frequency as the AM channels but are divided between the upper and lower half of the channel, or USB and LSB (Upper Sideband and Lower SideBand).

One advantage of SSB is that it receives half as much noise as AM because it uses only half the bandwidth.

Another advantage is that you have more effective power with SSB. Watt for watt, SSB has about 9 times the power of AM.

SSB radios are more expensive, but you don't have to change the antenna or anything else. You -do- have to use one more knob, the 'clarifier', which makes voices sound normal instead of like ducks.

Range for any mode depends mostly on your antenna and your terrain, but with any given antenna the range using SSB will usually be several times greater than using AM.

Legal power for CB radio is limited to 4 watts AM or 12 watts SSB. You don't need a license for CB regardless of whether you use AM or SSB.

Hope that helps.

Andy (2LD751) recently posted a question regarding remote cb's.
Cobra made a model many years ago called the 67LTD. Box mounts under the seat and everything is in the handheld unit. Only problem is sometimes the wiring gets brittle and the unit becomes useless. I have 2 working units and had 2 dead ones.

Sharp also made 2 similar type units. Sharps model had a detachable handheld unit. One of them came with a switchable ANL in the handheld and a signal strength meter on the speaker part.
The other sharp came w/o the meter & ANL.
Its very hard to find a competent cb shop that can work on the remote CB' s.

I'll second the recommendation for Family Radio Service (FRS) radios.
The scenario you describe is tailor-made for that type of transceiver, and they are available at just about every mass-marketer.

As suggested in another post, cell phones are also useful for this, but if your situation involves kids then that may not be a viable solution.
FRS is fine for them to use.

The best solution, though, is to use amateur radio equipment. Ham equipment allows you to operate on frequencies that are set aside just for ham radio -- therefore you don't have to compete with 500 other families at Disneyland who are also using FRS equipment, for example -- and at higher power levels than you could use with FRS (or GMRS or CB) equipment. You will need a license to operate amateur radio equipment, however. In the past, that included a Morse Code exam, but that's no longer the case if you're just looking at using VHF/UHF equipment. The exam consists of a simple multiple-guess exam these days, and testing opportunities abound all over the US.

My wife opted to get a license several years ago, and it's proven to be very helpful to us over the years. Although we also have FRS equipment to keep in touch with other non-ham members of the family when we're out shopping or at amusement parks, Claudia (KC6NGO) and I use the ham gear when it's just the two of us. It helped us greatly when we were taking two cars cross-country from Southern California to New York several years ago. We also use it when we go camping. It's been especially helpful when we were at the Rose Parade -- I have done communication support along with the 300+ other hams who help out each year, and Claudia kept in touch with me via the radio when she was camped out on the parade route with the grandkids while I was working at the parade.

Something to consider.

Yep, I sure got what I paid for LOL.

That said, there are a number of pretty good freeware programs. Zone Alarm, Big Fix, and AVG come to mind. I've tried a number of programs and like to see how they perform on different operating systems before I recommend them to anyone. Needless to say, that freeware registry compressor has been relegated to the garbage heap :))

Hello All:

A weather update and skip condations report, From the Mojave Desert.

Very cold winds and light rain last night, with some light hail, and even some snow flakes. Light wind and rain tonight, with the wood stove running all night again tonight.

Listening in on the scanner the Highway Patrol was closing some mountain roads as tow trucks had to remove several cars today out of the mountain roads. Skip did not allow the CB Radio to work for local communications, but the 2 meter ham band was alive with emerengy use today.

The skip died down this evening so now we have two locals in modified hot rod Jeeps out there mountain toping talking on the radios to all over the High Desert, and into the Los Angles areas. Hope they can get down as tempatures will certainly drop below frezzing to night in the mountains.

This will certaily be heavy jacket wearing weather. And its a good call to stock up on canned food, Gas, fire wood, long underware, and what ever else you would need, should we get snowed in again, and such from Miss Dinah's Fillin Station, just down the road ah ways.

The snow reports and local road condations will be on channel 12 and 15, with some guys sneaking off to Lower 38 and 40. Early in the morning. From about 4 AM to 7 AM.

Jay in the Mojave Catch me on 12 or 435.

Hello Ozark 333:

Yes it does. My ol friend "Ray" Buckshot use to raise havic with the local SSB guys with a old Imperal Rang Gain, that had DSB, it transmitted on both uper and lower Side Bands at the same time.

Ray would record the SSB stations while in the AM Mode so the stations where not tuned in and of course sounded like Donld Duck. Then replaying the recorded SSB stations back out on DSB. No matter what you did you could not tune in the stations that ray was playing back. It throw me for a while, until I called Ray up and asked what the heck he was doing. We had a good laugh!

Other radios had a DSB output also. I believe the Trams did until the Tram 201 and 201A came out.

One of the first radios to have true single sideband was the Johnson 350 a two channel SSB only radio, and the Mark Sidewinder 27, a 6 channel radio, with no S-Meter, made by Dyascan I believe.

General Radiotelephone came out with the SB-72 that offered true Single Side Band, and had a Collins Mechnical Filter in the radio.

Put a switch in the AM Carrier adjustment circuit to turn off the

If you agree that I am not taking any sides, why argue the validity of such views? Why did you only feel it necessary to argue against one side, without consideration that I mentioned all sides?
I don't see any "keyclowns" whining about my mention of the pro-legal issues.

The OP never asked what the law said, they referred to the arguments here and the "gay" posts... my post was a reply to that issue, not some attempt to argue against pro-legal or keyclown beliefs.
However, if you feel offended in some way, I suspect you may belong to the other group - those who never grew up and still act like children with "gay" remarks.
Such people are only using the "pro-legal" label as a cover for the fact that they are trolls. They don't really care about those issues, they just like filling the group with angry posts. They make the term "legal CB" seem like a dirty word, as if anyone who is pro-legal has to be a twat.
If they felt that it would get more arguments going, they would happily take the "keyclown" label and argue that side.

The problem is that some people continue to be baited by those trolls, when killfiling them would be the best option.

Could you show me where I refer to "the constitution"? I didn't think so, I refererred to some people believing in such freedoms.

I decided to humour you, and look up the words in my English dictionary and there is no mention of the constitution or court actions... what a surprise.
So, I did a Google search on "frredom of communications"...

http://www.google.com/search?hl=en&q=freedom+of+communications&btnG=Google+Search Great list of sites, but no links to the constitution... nothing to suggest that the term is defined by the constitution or an American court.

So I decided to look up the constitution...
http://www.law.cornell.edu/constitution/constitution.table.html
Maybe you could show me the part which refers to freedom of communications, or defines English language. While you are at it, maybe you can show the part which says that people cannot believe that some things should be different... maybe a court case showing that you are a criminal just for having a different idea of what is right.
If so, someone had better arrest Arnie and his supporters for holding beliefs contrary to Article 2...
http://www.law.cornell.edu/constitution/constitution.articleii.html

Can you show how that constitition applies to me? Remember, this is "rec.radio.cb"... not "usa.radio.cb".
Maybe you think that anything not labeled as belonging to a specific nation automatically belongs to America. Is this not how many criminals think, if it is not clearly marked as belonging to someone, you can freely take it and call it yours?

Peter.

How about a case from the US Supreme Court?

"Freedom of the press may protect criticism and agitation for modification or repeal of laws, but it does not extend to protection of him who counsels and encourages the violation of the law as it exists. The Constitution was adopted to preserve our Government, not to serve as a protecting screen for those who while claiming its privileges seek to destroy it."

What does the executive branch have to do with this discussion?

Your issue with Bin Laden is with Bush. Bush is the one that claimed CAPTURING Bin Laden was his number one priority in Sept. of 2001. As recently as last year Bush claimed not only is BL no longer a priority, but that he has no clue where he may be and that he doesn't care where he is.

It's been like that long before Bin Laden entered the picture, but Bush managed to snow many of his sheople into thinking and believing the jihad was launched against America in the last few years by BL.

>In his own words:

You omit Usama's words regarding his number one stated goal: "Draw the US into the Arab conflict." Appears he succeeded overwhelmingly.....Bush handed it to him on a silver plater...yet, Bush continues to fail with all his claims
One more item worth noting,,,,,,there are countless countries that routinely prtice genocide, ethnic cleansing, and the routine killing of other religious, nationality, outsiders, etc. "Kill or be killed" is so much bullshit its laughable, but it fits in very well with the Bush bullshit of "either with us or against us",,nicely paraphrased from Stalin.

NOTICE OF APPARENT LIABILITY FOR FORFEITURE

Adopted: November 18, 2004 Released: November 22, 2004

By the Commission:

I. Introduction

In this Notice of Apparent Liability for Forfeiture ("NAL"), we find Pilot Travel Centers, L.L.C. ("Pilot") apparently liable for a forfeiture in the amount of one hundred twenty-five thousand dollars ($125,000) for willful and repeated violations of Section 302(b) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended ("Act"), and Section 2.803(a)(1) of the Commission's Rules ("Rules"). Specifically, we find Pilot apparently liable for offering for sale radio frequency devices without the required Commission equipment authorization.

II. background

Section 302 of the Act authorizes the Commission to make reasonable regulations, consistent with the public interest, governing the interference potential of equipment that emits radio frequency energy, and prohibits, inter alia, the offering for sale of radio frequency devices to the extent such activity does not comply with those regulations. The purpose of this section is to ensure that radio transmitters and other electronic devices meet certain standards to control interference before they reach the market. The Commission carries out its responsibilities under Section 302 in two ways. First, the Commission establishes technical regulations for transmitters and other equipment to minimize their potential for causing interference to radio services. Second, the Commission administers an equipment authorization program to ensure that equipment reaching the market complies with the technical requirements. The equipment authorization program requires that equipment be tested either by the manufacturer or at a private test laboratory to ensure that it complies with the technical requirements. For a large number of devices, including Citizens Band ("CB") radio transmitting equipment, equipment may not be marketed within the United States unless it has been tested and found to comply with Commission technical requirements, granted Commission Certification, and properly labeled. "Marketing" includes the sale or lease, offer for sale or lease (including advertising for sale or lease), importing, shipping, and/or distribution for the purpose of selling or leasing or offering for sale or lease.

Unlike CB radio transmitting equipment, radio transmitting equipment that transmits solely on Amateur Radio Service ("ARS") frequencies is not subject to equipment authorization requirements prior to manufacture or marketing. However, some radio transmitters that transmit in a portion of the 10-meter band of the ARS (28.000 to 29.700 MHz) are equipped with rotary, toggle, or pushbutton switches mounted externally on the unit, which allow operation in the CB bands after completion of minor and trivial internal modifications to the equipment. To address these radios, the Commission adopted changes to the CB type acceptance requirements by defining a "CB Transmitter" as "a transmitter that operates or is intended to operate at a station authorized in the CB."

Despite these changes to the definition of a CB transmitter, Commission enforcement agents continued to encounter non-certified CB transmitters marketed as ARS transmitters. On May 13, 1996, the Commission's Office of Engineering and Technology ("OET") released a Public Notice "to clarify the Commission's Rules regarding equipment that is intended to operate in various radio services in the high frequency radio spectrum, including '10-Meter' Amateur Radio Service (ARS) equipment." The Notice stated that transmitters intended for operation on non-amateur frequencies must be approved prior to manufacture, importation or marketing. The Notice specifically included ARS transceivers designed "such that they can easily be modified by the users to extend the operating frequency range into the frequency bands" of the CB and other non-amateur radio services among those devices subject to equipment authorization procedures. The Notice also stated that the Commission considers these transceivers as intended to be operated on frequencies where the use of type accepted equipment is required "because of the simplicity of modifying them to extend their operating frequency range." The Commission's Office of General Counsel ("OGC") later released a letter on the importation and marketing of ARS transmitters, which clarified that such transmitters that "have a built-in capability to operate on CB frequencies and can easily be altered to activate that capability, such as by moving or removing a jumper plug or cutting a single wire" fall within the definition of "CB transmitter" under Section 95.603(c) of the Rules and therefore require certification prior to marketing or importation.

From December 9, 2001 through May 6, 2003, the Commission received four complaints specifically naming Pilot Travel Centers as marketing non-certified CB transceivers. From August 2001 through September 2002, Enforcement Bureau field agents visited eleven Pilot retail outlets at the following locations: Sulphur Springs, Texas; Dallas, Texas; Weatherford, Texas; Brooks, Oregon; Casa Grande, California; Quartzsite, California; North Palm Springs, California; North Las Vegas, Nevada; Barstow, California; Boron, California; and Hesperia, California. At these locations, the stores displayed and offered for sale various models of non-certified CB transceivers marketed as ARS transmitters. Prior to the field visits, OET had tested all of these models and found each of them to be non-certified CB transceivers.

As a result of agent inspections of Pilot retail stores from December 2, 1999 to September 6, 2002, Enforcement Bureau Field Offices issued nine Citations to Pilot. The Bureau issued one Citation to Pilot's corporate headquarters in Knoxville, Tennessee, and eight Citations to different Pilot retail outlets in Brooks, Oregon; Casa Grande, California; Quartzsite, California; North Palm Springs, California; North Las Vegas, Nevada; Barstow, California; Boron, California; and Hesperia, California. Each of these Citations advised Pilot of observed violations of the Commission's equipment authorization and marketing rules, specifically, marketing non-certified CB transceivers in violation of Section 302(b) of the Act and Section 2.803(a)(1) of the Rules. The Citations warned Pilot that future violations may subject Pilot to civil monetary forfeitures not to exceed $11,000 for each such violation or each day of a continuing violation, seizure of equipment through in rem forfeiture action, and criminal sanctions including fines and imprisonment.

On December 7, 2001, the Enforcement Bureau's Dallas Field Office ("Dallas Office") received from Pilot a response dated December 6, 2001 to the Citation issued to Pilot's corporate headquarters in Knoxville, Tennessee. The response from Pilot's Vice President, General Counsel, and Secretary stated that "[a]ll of the radios in question are marketed as amateur radios and, as sold, operate on the 10-meter amateur band. Part 97 of 47 C.F.R., not Part 95, governs these transceivers. Part 97 does not require type acceptance of amateur radios." On January 28, 2002, the Dallas Office mailed a letter to Pilot's corporate headquarters addressing Pilot's response to the Citation. The letter advised Pilot that the devices referred to in the Citation are intended for use on CB as well as ARS frequencies, because they have built-in design features which facilitate their operation on CB frequencies by the exercise of simple, end-user accessible, modifications to the devices. The letter further advised that such devices are considered CB transmitters pursuant to Section 95.603(c) of the Rules, irrespective of any labeling purporting the devices to be "Amateur Radio Transceivers." The Dallas Office received no further response from Pilot. In addition, Enforcement Bureau Field Offices received five other responses from

Citations issued to Pilot, one response from Pilot's Vice President, General Counsel, and Secretary and four other responses from a Pilot Paralegal. All five responses similarly disputed the Commission's statements in the Citations that Pilot illegally marketed non-certified CB transmitters. Enforcement Bureau Field Offices issued follow-up responses to each of these letters advising Pilot that the devices in question are considered CB transmitters and that marketing of the non-certified devices was not lawful.

Subsequent to issuance of the above-mentioned Citations and follow-up letters, from December 11, 2003 to July 3, 2004, Enforcement Bureau field agents made seven visits to Pilot retail stores nationwide where Pilot offered for sale non-certified models of Galaxy brand CB transceivers. As noted above, OET had already tested these specific models and determined them all to be dual use Amateur Radio and CB transmitters. Each of the models could be modified to allow transmit capabilities on CB frequencies.

On December 16, 17, and 18, 2003, Enforcement Bureau field agents purchased three Galaxy transceivers (models DX33HML, DX99V and DX66V, respectively) from three different Pilot retail stores and had them tested by the laboratory of OET. On April 1, 2004, the laboratory of OET issued an evaluation report for each of the three purchased transceivers and found that they were all non-certified CB transmitters.

III. Discussion

Section 302(b) of the Act provides that no person shall manufacture, import, sell, offer for sale, or ship devices or home electronic equipment and systems, or use devices, which fail to comply with regulations promulgated pursuant to this section. Section 2.803(a)(1) of the Rules provides that:

> (a) Except as provided elsewhere in this section, no person shall sell or lease, or offer for sale or lease (including advertising for sale or lease), or import, ship, or distribute for the purpose of selling or leasing or offering for sale or lease, any radio frequency device unless: (1) [i]n the case of a device subject to certification, such device has been authorized by the Commission in accordance with the rules in this chapter and is properly identified and labeled as required by § 2.925 and other relevant sections in this chapter[.]

Section 95.603(c) of the Rules requires that "[e]ach CB transmitter (a transmitter that operates or is intended to operate at a station authorized in the CB) must be certificated." Section 95.655(a) of the Rules states that "[n]o transmitter will be certificated for use in the CB service if it is equipped with a frequency capability not [authorized for CB in Part 95 of the Rules]." This section also states that "([CB t]ransmitters with frequency capability for the Amateur Radio Services . will not be certificated.)" Additionally, Section 95.655(c) of the Rules prohibits any internal or external add-on device that functions to extend the transmitting frequency capability of a CB transmitter beyond its original capability.

Prior to October 2002, Pilot offered for sale various non-certified CB transmitters at eleven of its retail outlets. Commission Field Offices issued a total of nine Citations to Pilot's corporate headquarters and its retail outlets warning Pilot that future violations would subject Pilot to penalties including civil monetary forfeitures. Subsequently, in forty-seven separate instances from October 8, 2002 to July 3, 2004, Pilot offered for sale various models of non-certified Galaxy brand CB transmitters, which had all been tested and determined by OET to be non-certified CB transmitters. Although they were labeled as "amateur radios," the specified models of Galaxy transmitters are CB transmitters, because each was designed to be easily modified by the end user to allow operation on CB frequencies. Additionally, in at least eleven of the forty-seven instances of marketing by Pilot, Pilot employees referred to the devices as "CB's."

Based on the evidence before us, we find that in thirteen instances -- six on December 11, 2003, one each on December 16, 17, and 18, 2003, three on March 25, 2004, and one on July 3, 2004 -- Pilot offered for sale non-certified CB transmitters in apparent willful and repeated violation of Section 302(b) of the Act and Section 2.803(a)(1) of the Rules.

Section 503(b) of the Act, authorizes the Commission to assess a forfeiture for each willful or repeated violation of the Act or of any rule, regulation, or order issued by the Commission under the Act. In exercising such authority, we are to take into account "the nature, circumstances, extent, and gravity of the violation and, with respect to the violator, the degree of culpability, any history of prior offenses, ability to pay, and such other matters as justice may require."

Pursuant to The Commission's Forfeiture Policy Statement and Amendment of Section 1.80 of the Rules to Incorporate the Forfeiture Guidelines ("Forfeiture Policy Statement") and Section 1.80 of the Rules, the base forfeiture amount for marketing unauthorized equipment is $7,000 per violation. Thus, the total base forfeiture amount for all of Pilot's violations is $91,000.

We are concerned, however, with the pattern of apparent violations here. Our equipment authorization rules ensure that radio transmitters and other electronic equipment comply with Commission technical requirements. The proliferation of non-certified CB transmitters may result in interference to certified CB transmitters and other devices, thereby undermining the effectiveness of our technical rules. Furthermore, we have previously stated that ARS equipment that can be easily modified to extend the operating frequency range into CB frequency bands are CB transmitters subject to equipment authorization procedures.

We are particularly troubled that Pilot continues to violate these rules despite receiving nine Citations for marketing non-certified CB transmitters. These Citations put Pilot on actual notice that marketing of this equipment is unlawful, yet Pilot intentionally continued to market the unlawful equipment. Pilot's continuing violations of the equipment authorization requirements evince a pattern of intentional non-compliance with and apparent disregard for these rules. Accordingly, we believe an upward adjustment of the base forfeiture amount is warranted. Applying the Forfeiture Policy Statement and statutory factors (e.g., nature, extent and gravity of the violation and the history of prior offenses) to the instant case, we conclude that it is appropriate to propose a forfeiture of $125,000 for Pilot's apparent violations. Therefore, we find Pilot apparently liable for a forfeiture in the amount of $125,000.

IV. ordering clauses

Accordingly, IT IS ORDERED that, pursuant to Section 503(b) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, and Section 1.80 of the Commission's Rules, Pilot Travel Centers, L.L.C. is hereby NOTIFIED of this APPARENT LIABILITY FOR A FORFEITURE in the amount of one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars ($125,000) for willfully and repeatedly violating Section 302(b) of the Act, and Section 2.803(a)(1) of the Rules.

> On December 7, 2001, the Enforcement Bureau's Dallas Field Office ("Dallas

As long as folks like Oxendine continue to accept this as enforcement, nothing will change. Corporations get popped and pay fines all the time. It's accepted and often standard business practice in the USA and a specialty of the right wing. The fine is listed as an expense at tax time. The large corporations continue to do business as usual while the feds pacify insignificants with smoke and mirrors (fines). Meanwhile, the Oxendines of the land are easily fooled. Armed with a false sense of superiority, Oxendine, in all actuality, is saying, "Thank-you-sir-my-I-have-another?", when he is unable to grasp exactly what it is he just received. Cut him some slack. He's in a learning process.

I'd rather shake my bones to some good old music of the sixties or seventies. Breakin' them bones is getting kind of painful in old age. I noticed last year when I was up in the frozen north that certain joints were throbbing that never ached before,,,,,well, not since I had the casts off.

Hello, gang

Now that one Supreme Court justice is stating something to the effect that separation of Church and State is not totally possible (he is part of the Bush agenda) ... and now that the U.S. Parks system is being sued for not carrying a book that states that the Grand Canyon cannot be more than 4,000 years old, I have a couple of questions regarding marriage and other musings.

1). Since Adam and Eve started this, where did the 3rd generation come from? Um ... does this mean we can marry one of our parents or a brother or sister?

2). Which religious organization is to rule us? Will it be the Mormons? Does this mean that polygamy will once again be legal? Or perhaps the Catholics, since they are not happy with divorce or abortion.

3). How much will religion play in our new found country? Will we be extremely religious, such as Iran and most of the Middle East? Say, I never thought ... perhaps the Muslims should rule (go back to question 2) or, then again, the Jewish (refer again to question 2).

4). Will any other religions be permitted?

5). Now that we will have a very religious country (the fact that pi is now equal to three, exactly, will not matter - we've sent manufacturing to China and outsourced IT to India. I'm sure we can find someone else to do our engineering), how do we fit in with the nuclear powers (Israel, Russia, North Korea, England, and soon to be nuclear powers - religious organizations such as Iran. Oh, I forgot the Hindus. Better add India.)? Could this partially be behind Russia's desire to build up their nuclear arsenal to be the most powerful in the world? I remember someone in the paper blaming it on the missile defense system of the U.S. which was caused by the Democrats. LOL - my error; here I thought "Star Wars" was Ronald Ray-Guns idea.

Suddenly, this makes the question of linear (or non-linear) amplifiers pretty trivial, in my mind :))

Best regards from Rochester, NY
Jim

I am in Reno,NV and I get skip from all over east coast of the U.S and as far south as Alabama. When I lived in Roseburg, OR I used to get Skp even better with my Cobra with SSB. I used to regularly hear guys on channel 33 I don't remember if it was USB or LSB though. That was during a big sun cycle for skip.

Except when the "go to jail" part of the penalty comes up for repeated violations. Also don't overlook that some of those Pilot Travel centers may be wholly own franchises where the owner has to pay the fine if they get busted. The real fine is having to go to court to fight the FCC, and that sounds like what may happen. When it does it could cost them much more than the $125K fine depending on how far they want to take the fight up the legal ladder. This would be the case to watch.

>> Subsequent to issuance of the above-mentioned Citations and follow-up >> letters, from December 11, 2003 to July 3, 2004, Enforcement Bureau field >> agents made seven visits to Pilot retail stores nationwide where Pilot >> offered for sale non-certified models of Galaxy brand CB transceivers. As >> noted above, OET had already tested these specific models and determined >> them all to be dual use Amateur Radio and CB transmitters. Each of the >> models could be modified to allow transmit capabilities on CB >> frequencies.
>>
>> On December 16, 17, and 18, 2003, Enforcement Bureau field agents >> purchased >> three Galaxy transceivers (models DX33HML, DX99V and DX66V, respectively) >> from three different Pilot retail stores and had them tested by the >> laboratory of OET. On April 1, 2004, the laboratory of OET issued an >> evaluation report for each of the three purchased transceivers and found >> that they were all non-certified CB transmitters.

>> III. Discussion
>>
>>
>> Section 302(b) of the Act provides that no person shall manufacture,
>> import,
>> sell, offer for sale, or ship devices or home electronic equipment and >> systems, or use devices, which fail to comply with regulations >> promulgated >> pursuant to this section. Section 2.803(a)(1) of the Rules provides that:
>>
>>
>> (a) Except as provided elsewhere in this section, no person shall sell or >> lease, or offer for sale or lease (including advertising for sale or >> lease),
>> or import, ship, or distribute for the purpose of selling or leasing or >> offering for sale or lease, any radio frequency device unless: (1) [i]n
>> the >> case of a device subject to certification, such device has been >> authorized
>> by the Commission in accordance with the rules in this chapter and is >> properly identified and labeled as required by § 2.925 and other relevant >> sections in this chapter[.]
>>
>>
>> Section 95.603(c) of the Rules requires that "[e]ach CB transmitter (a >> transmitter that operates or is intended to operate at a station
>> authorized >> in the CB) must be certificated." Section 95.655(a) of the Rules states
>> that
>> "[n]o transmitter will be certificated for use in the CB service if it is >> equipped with a frequency capability not [authorized for CB in Part 95 of >> the Rules]." This section also states that "([CB t]ransmitters with >> frequency capability for the Amateur Radio Services . will not be >> certificated.)" Additionally, Section 95.655(c) of the Rules prohibits >> any >> internal or external add-on device that functions to extend the >> transmitting
>> frequency capability of a CB transmitter beyond its original capability.
>>
>> Prior to October 2002, Pilot offered for sale various non-certified CB >> transmitters at eleven of its retail outlets. Commission Field Offices >> issued a total of nine Citations to Pilot's corporate headquarters and >> its >> retail outlets warning Pilot that future violations would subject Pilot
>> to >> penalties including civil monetary forfeitures. Subsequently, in >> forty-seven >> separate instances from October 8, 2002 to July 3, 2004, Pilot offered
>> for >> sale various models of non-certified Galaxy brand CB transmitters, which >> had >> all been tested and determined by OET to be non-certified CB

>> transmitters.
>> Although they were labeled as "amateur radios," the specified models of >> Galaxy transmitters are CB transmitters, because each was designed to be >> easily modified by the end user to allow operation on CB frequencies.
>> Additionally, in at least eleven of the forty-seven instances of >> marketing
>> by Pilot, Pilot employees referred to the devices as "CB's."
>>
>> Based on the evidence before us, we find that in thirteen instances -- >> six >> on December 11, 2003, one each on December 16, 17, and 18, 2003, three on >> March 25, 2004, and one on July 3, 2004 -- Pilot offered for sale >> non-certified CB transmitters in apparent willful and repeated violation
>> of >> Section 302(b) of the Act and Section 2.803(a)(1) of the Rules.
>>
>> Section 503(b) of the Act, authorizes the Commission to assess a >> forfeiture
>> for each willful or repeated violation of the Act or of any rule, >> regulation, or order issued by the Commission under the Act. In >> exercising
>> such authority, we are to take into account "the nature, circumstances, >> extent, and gravity of the violation and, with respect to the violator,
>> the >> degree of culpability, any history of prior offenses, ability to pay, and >> such other matters as justice may require."
>>
>> Pursuant to The Commission's Forfeiture Policy Statement and Amendment of >> Section 1.80 of the Rules to Incorporate the Forfeiture Guidelines
>> ("Forfeiture Policy Statement") and Section 1.80 of the Rules, the base >> forfeiture amount for marketing unauthorized equipment is $7,000 per >> violation. Thus, the total base forfeiture amount for all of Pilot's >> violations is $91,000.
>>
>> We are concerned, however, with the pattern of apparent violations here.
>> Our
>> equipment authorization rules ensure that radio transmitters and other >> electronic equipment comply with Commission technical requirements. The >> proliferation of non-certified CB transmitters may result in interference
>> to >> certified CB transmitters and other devices, thereby undermining the >> effectiveness of our technical rules. Furthermore, we have previously >> stated >> that ARS equipment that can be easily modified to extend the operating >> frequency range into CB frequency bands are CB transmitters subject to >> equipment authorization procedures.

>>
>> We are particularly troubled that Pilot continues to violate these rules
>> despite receiving nine Citations for marketing non-certified CB >> transmitters. These Citations put Pilot on actual notice that marketing
>> of >> this equipment is unlawful, yet Pilot intentionally continued to market
>> the >> unlawful equipment. Pilot's continuing violations of the equipment >> authorization requirements evince a pattern of intentional non-compliance >> with and apparent disregard for these rules. Accordingly, we believe an >> upward adjustment of the base forfeiture amount is warranted. Applying
>> the >> Forfeiture Policy Statement and statutory factors (e.g., nature, extent
>> and >> gravity of the violation and the history of prior offenses) to the >> instant >> case, we conclude that it is appropriate to propose a forfeiture of >> $125,000
>> for Pilot's apparent violations. Therefore, we find Pilot apparently >> liable
>> for a forfeiture in the amount of $125,000.
>>
>> IV. ordering clauses
>>
>>
>> Accordingly, IT IS ORDERED that, pursuant to Section 503(b) of the

>> LIABILITY FOR A FORFEITURE in the amount of one hundred and twenty-five >> thousand dollars ($125,000) for willfully and repeatedly violating >> Section
>> 302(b) of the Act, and Section 2.803(a)(1) of the Rules.

>>>
>>> By the Commission:

>>>
>>> I. Introduction
>>>
>>>
>>> In this Notice of Apparent Liability for Forfeiture ("NAL"), we find >>> Pilot
>>> Travel Centers, L.L.C. ("Pilot") apparently liable for a forfeiture in
>>> the >>> amount of one hundred twenty-five thousand dollars ($125,000) for willful >>> and repeated violations of Section 302(b) of the Communications Act of >>> 1934, >>> as amended ("Act"), and Section 2.803(a)(1) of the Commission's Rules >>> ("Rules"). Specifically, we find Pilot apparently liable for offering for >>> sale radio frequency devices without the required Commission equipment >>> authorization.
>>>
>>>
>>> II. background
>>>
>>>
>>> Section 302 of the Act authorizes the Commission to make reasonable >>> regulations, consistent with the public interest, governing the >>> interference >>> potential of equipment that emits radio frequency energy, and prohibits, >>> inter alia, the offering for sale of radio frequency devices to the >>> extent >>> such activity does not comply with those regulations. The purpose of this >>> section is to ensure that radio transmitters and other electronic devices >>> meet certain standards to control interference before they reach the >>> market.
>>> The Commission carries out its responsibilities under Section 302 in two >>> ways. First, the Commission establishes technical regulations for >>> transmitters and other equipment to minimize their potential for causing >>> interference to radio services. Second, the Commission administers an >>> equipment authorization program to ensure that equipment reaching the >>> market
>>> complies with the technical requirements. The equipment authorization >>> program requires that equipment be tested either by the manufacturer or >>> at a >>> private test laboratory to ensure that it complies with the technical >>> requirements. For a large number of devices, including Citizens Band >>> ("CB")
>>> radio transmitting equipment, equipment may not be marketed within the >>> United States unless it has been tested and found to comply with >>> Commission
>>> technical requirements, granted Commission Certification, and properly >>> labeled. "Marketing" includes the sale or lease, offer for sale or lease >>> (including advertising for sale or lease), importing, shipping, and/or >>> distribution for the purpose of selling or leasing or offering for sale >>> or

>>> lease.
>>>
>>> Unlike CB radio transmitting equipment, radio transmitting equipment that >>> transmits solely on Amateur Radio Service ("ARS") frequencies is not >>> subject >>> to equipment authorization requirements prior to manufacture or >>> marketing.
>>> However, some radio transmitters that transmit in a portion of the >>> 10-meter
>>> band of the ARS (28.000 to 29.700 MHz) are equipped with rotary, toggle,
>>> or >>> pushbutton switches mounted externally on the unit, which allow operation
>>> in >>> the CB bands after completion of minor and trivial internal modifications
>>> to >>> the equipment. To address these radios, the Commission adopted changes to >>> the CB type acceptance requirements by defining a "CB Transmitter" as "a >>> transmitter that operates or is intended to operate at a station
>>> authorized
>>> in the CB."
>>>
>>> Despite these changes to the definition of a CB transmitter, Commission >>> enforcement agents continued to encounter non-certified CB transmitters >>> marketed as ARS transmitters. On May 13, 1996, the Commission's Office of >>> Engineering and Technology ("OET") released a Public Notice "to clarify
>>> the >>> Commission's Rules regarding equipment that is intended to operate in >>> various radio services in the high frequency radio spectrum, including
>>> '10-Meter'
>>> Amateur Radio Service (ARS) equipment." The Notice stated that >>> transmitters
>>> intended for operation on non-amateur frequencies must be approved prior
>>> to >>> manufacture, importation or marketing. The Notice specifically included >>> ARS
>>> transceivers designed "such that they can easily be modified by the users
>>> to >>> extend the operating frequency range into the frequency bands" of the CB
>>> and >>> other non-amateur radio services among those devices subject to equipment >>> authorization procedures. The Notice also stated that the Commission >>> considers these transceivers as intended to be operated on frequencies
>>> where
>>> the use of type accepted equipment is required "because of the simplicity
>>> of >>> modifying them to extend their operating frequency range." The >>> Commission's >>> Office of General Counsel ("OGC") later released a letter on the >>> importation
>>> and marketing of ARS transmitters, which clarified that such transmitters >>> that "have a built-in capability to operate on CB frequencies and can >>> easily >>> be altered to activate that capability, such as by moving or removing a >>> jumper plug or cutting a single wire" fall within the definition of "CB >>> transmitter" under Section 95.603(c) of the Rules and therefore require >>> certification prior to marketing or importation.

>>>
>>> From December 9, 2001 through May 6, 2003, the Commission received four >>> complaints specifically naming Pilot Travel Centers as marketing >>> non-certified CB transceivers. From August 2001 through September 2002, >>> Enforcement Bureau field agents visited eleven Pilot retail outlets at
>>> the
>>> following locations: Sulphur Springs, Texas; Dallas, Texas; Weatherford, >>> Texas; Brooks, Oregon; Casa Grande, California; Quartzsite, California;
>>> North Palm Springs, California; North Las Vegas, Nevada; Barstow, >>> California; Boron, California; and Hesperia, California. At these >>> locations,
>>> the stores displayed and offered for sale various models of non-certified
>>> CB
>>> transceivers marketed as ARS transmitters. Prior to the field visits, OET >>> had tested all of these models and found each of them to be non-certified >>> CB
>>> transceivers.
>>>
>>> As a result of agent inspections of Pilot retail stores from December 2, >>> 1999 to September 6, 2002, Enforcement Bureau Field Offices issued nine >>> Citations to Pilot. The Bureau issued one Citation to Pilot's corporate >>> headquarters in Knoxville, Tennessee, and eight Citations to different >>> Pilot
>>> retail outlets in Brooks, Oregon; Casa Grande, California; Quartzsite, >>> California; North Palm Springs, California; North Las Vegas, Nevada; >>> Barstow, California; Boron, California; and Hesperia, California. Each of >>> these Citations advised Pilot of observed violations of the Commission's >>> equipment authorization and marketing rules, specifically, marketing >>> non-certified CB transceivers in violation of Section 302(b) of the Act
>>> and >>> Section 2.803(a)(1) of the Rules. The Citations warned Pilot that future >>> violations may subject Pilot to civil monetary forfeitures not to exceed >>> $11,000 for each such violation or each day of a continuing violation, >>> seizure of equipment through in rem forfeiture action, and criminal >>> sanctions including fines and imprisonment.
>>>
>>> On December 7, 2001, the Enforcement Bureau's Dallas Field Office >>> ("Dallas >>> Office") received from Pilot a response dated December 6, 2001 to the >>> Citation issued to Pilot's corporate headquarters in Knoxville, >>> Tennessee.
>>> The response from Pilot's Vice President, General Counsel, and Secretary >>> stated that "[a]ll of the radios in question are marketed as amateur >>> radios

>>> and, as sold, operate on the 10-meter amateur band. Part 97 of 47 C.F.R., >>> not Part 95, governs these transceivers. Part 97 does not require type >>> acceptance of amateur radios." On January 28, 2002, the Dallas Office >>> mailed
>>> a letter to Pilot's corporate headquarters addressing Pilot's response to >>> the Citation. The letter advised Pilot that the devices referred to in
>>> the >>> Citation are intended for use on CB as well as ARS frequencies, because >>> they >>> have built-in design features which facilitate their operation on CB >>> frequencies by the exercise of simple, end-user accessible, modifications
>>> to >>> the devices. The letter further advised that such devices are considered >>> CB
>>> transmitters pursuant to Section 95.603(c) of the Rules, irrespective of >>> any >>> labeling purporting the devices to be "Amateur Radio Transceivers." The >>> Dallas Office received no further response from Pilot. In addition, >>> Enforcement Bureau Field Offices received five other responses from >>> Citations issued to Pilot, one response from Pilot's Vice President, >>> General
>>> Counsel, and Secretary and four other responses from a Pilot Paralegal.
>>> All >>> five responses similarly disputed the Commission's statements in the >>> Citations that Pilot illegally marketed non-certified CB transmitters.
>>> Enforcement Bureau Field Offices issued follow-up responses to each of >>> these >>> letters advising Pilot that the devices in question are considered CB >>> transmitters and that marketing of the non-certified devices was not >>> lawful.
>>>

>>>
>>>
>>> Section 302(b) of the Act provides that no person shall manufacture,
>>> import,
>>> sell, offer for sale, or ship devices or home electronic equipment and >>> systems, or use devices, which fail to comply with regulations
>>> promulgated >>> pursuant to this section. Section 2.803(a)(1) of the Rules provides that:
>>>
>>>
>>> (a) Except as provided elsewhere in this section, no person shall sell or >>> lease, or offer for sale or lease (including advertising for sale or >>> lease),
>>> or import, ship, or distribute for the purpose of selling or leasing or >>> offering for sale or lease, any radio frequency device unless: (1) [i]n
>>> the >>> case of a device subject to certification, such device has been >>> authorized
>>> by the Commission in accordance with the rules in this chapter and is >>> properly identified and labeled as required by ï¿½ 2.925 and other relevant >>> sections in this chapter[.]
>>>
>>>
>>> Section 95.603(c) of the Rules requires that "[e]ach CB transmitter (a >>> transmitter that operates or is intended to operate at a station
>>> authorized >>> in the CB) must be certificated." Section 95.655(a) of the Rules states
>>> that
>>> "[n]o transmitter will be certificated for use in the CB service if it is >>> equipped with a frequency capability not [authorized for CB in Part 95 of >>> the Rules]." This section also states that "([CB t]ransmitters with >>> frequency capability for the Amateur Radio Services . will not be >>> certificated.)" Additionally, Section 95.655(c) of the Rules prohibits
>>> any >>> internal or external add-on device that functions to extend the >>> transmitting
>>> frequency capability of a CB transmitter beyond its original capability.
>>>
>>> Prior to October 2002, Pilot offered for sale various non-certified CB
>>> transmitters at eleven of its retail outlets. Commission Field Offices >>> issued a total of nine Citations to Pilot's corporate headquarters and >>> its >>> retail outlets warning Pilot that future violations would subject Pilot
>>> to >>> penalties including civil monetary forfeitures. Subsequently, in >>> forty-seven >>> separate instances from October 8, 2002 to July 3, 2004, Pilot offered
>>> for >>> sale various models of non-certified Galaxy brand CB transmitters, which >>> had

>>> all been tested and determined by OET to be non-certified CB
>>> transmitters.
>>> Although they were labeled as "amateur radios," the specified models of >>> Galaxy transmitters are CB transmitters, because each was designed to be >>> easily modified by the end user to allow operation on CB frequencies.
>>> Additionally, in at least eleven of the forty-seven instances of >>> marketing
>>> by Pilot, Pilot employees referred to the devices as "CB's."
>>>
>>> Based on the evidence before us, we find that in thirteen instances --
>>> six
>>> on December 11, 2003, one each on December 16, 17, and 18, 2003, three on >>> March 25, 2004, and one on July 3, 2004 -- Pilot offered for sale
>>> non-certified CB transmitters in apparent willful and repeated violation
>>> of
>>> Section 302(b) of the Act and Section 2.803(a)(1) of the Rules.
>>>
>>> Section 503(b) of the Act, authorizes the Commission to assess a >>> forfeiture
>>> for each willful or repeated violation of the Act or of any rule, >>> regulation, or order issued by the Commission under the Act. In >>> exercising
>>> such authority, we are to take into account "the nature, circumstances, >>> extent, and gravity of the violation and, with respect to the violator,
>>> the >>> degree of culpability, any history of prior offenses, ability to pay, and

>>>
>>> Pursuant to The Commission's Forfeiture Policy Statement and Amendment of >>> Section 1.80 of the Rules to Incorporate the Forfeiture Guidelines
>>> ("Forfeiture Policy Statement") and Section 1.80 of the Rules, the base >>> forfeiture amount for marketing unauthorized equipment is $7,000 per >>> violation. Thus, the total base forfeiture amount for all of Pilot's >>> violations is $91,000.
>>>
>>> We are concerned, however, with the pattern of apparent violations here.
>>> Our
>>> equipment authorization rules ensure that radio transmitters and other >>> effectiveness of our technical rules. Furthermore, we have previously >>> stated

>>> that ARS equipment that can be easily modified to extend the operating >>> frequency range into CB frequency bands are CB transmitters subject to >>> equipment authorization procedures.
>>>
>>> We are particularly troubled that Pilot continues to violate these rules
>>> despite receiving nine Citations for marketing non-certified CB

>>> transmitters. These Citations put Pilot on actual notice that marketing
>>> of >>> this equipment is unlawful, yet Pilot intentionally continued to market
>>> the >>> unlawful equipment. Pilot's continuing violations of the equipment

I have a few in the scrap heap (bad mods). I even have a JC Penney SSB model and an identical SSB Roadtalker. I tried to get one of them working with parts from both. Turns out the VCO isn't designed to cover bandwidth much larger than the CB (which is probably why the mods didn't work), and barely worked at all after being 'tweaked' by whatever moron did the mods.

It's a real shame to see decent radios destroyed by twits who can't be satisfied with 40 channels.

Tell me about it..Pesticide trucks draw more attention for spill clean-up and on-site license. I pride myself in compliance with that, mostly for the applicator exposure. The LD-50 on most of the pesticides we use are at least 3000 or higher, so you'd have to eat/drink massive amounts to kill you.

Long term effect is bad typing.

Yep, I had one years ago and the audio was sweet on SSB. It would be

My friend had the JC model and that was tall cotton back then.

Well, sorta my fault. I let Mikey work up there. The best part is my solder job on the ground and hot held it right there in my face about about mid-turn.

It didn't even spark, and I had it keyed up. I had to blast Mikey for his re-mount..he was in the truck with me when it fell so what could he say, besides sorry?

I soldered that copper with a bernzomatic. :)

Well, if the Catholics ruled we wouldn't need prisons -- the sentence for a crime would be to play with some beads, bark a few hail-mary's, then get released back onto the streets. But election 2004 suggests that the ruling religion would likely be a faction of conservative, bible-thumping, holier-than-thou WASPs. Forget any ideas of 'ethnic "Religion is the opium of the masses". And judging by the huge numbers of people in this country who have some sort of drug dependency (both prescription -and- illicit drugs), religion may be forced to share the power with the drug dealers and pharmaceutical corporations.

For a large company yeah you're right. But then again if one of the executives ends up in jail, which they can, then taking the radios off the shelf would have looked like the smart thing to do and then just shrug it off. Lately the government likes throwing white collar company executives in jail for wrong doing. After all just how much money are they going to realistically loose anyway from dumping the questionable radios from their sales line up? Not much is my guess. If the FCC chooses to play hard-ball I expect they will just do what the FCC told them to do, and not waste any more time or money on something that won't materially affect their bottom line.

The Rebel flag wasn't the smash hit some had hoped it would be either.
Although it remains to be very popular on the Nascar circuit, so go figure.

Anyone remember the Eagle amp? It has the same vaneer'd bird and such on its faceplate. I have one of those..actually i have the Mark IV and the amp. I don't use either anymore, and it took me a while to get the ping to my liking, but that's nostalgia city right there.

That's it. I passed up Homestead tickets back in the spring and now I wish we (wife and i) would have went. That may be the tightest race for the cup in my lifetime. We were gonna rent a car and drive to Key West the next day. We didn't do it because she wasn't sold on the new points thing either. It was competitive, if nothing else.

| For a large company yeah you're right. But then again if one of the | executives ends up in jail, which they can, then taking the radios off the | shelf would have looked like the smart thing to do and then just shrug it | off. Lately the government likes throwing white collar company executives
in

I had 3 of them at one time, two of the led models (leds never burned out), one in each of my cars back then, and the big SSB/AM Base/mobil too as a base on a combo PDLII and Starduster.

To bad I didn't see it, but had to work on my car today to get it running. Every time I've tried for a Sears SSB/Am radio, the price has gone way over what I could pay.

Ya, they where, one walked off when my car window got smashed while I was out driving my yellow cab. The other one lasted a few more years until I got a call at work that my then wifes car had been hit while parked and had been totaled.

So for a long time all I had left was that BIG Base/mobil and it was a good radio. Then a lighting hit on power lines took out the AC power supply so I took it into a CB shop in Sunland,CA. to have that fixed.

When I got it back, I don't know what he did, but it was trashed, when I went back on the air, not even a 100mw walkie sitting a block away could hear me!

Sad to say that 2 other shops later on and it died . There was one of those not long ago on e-bay and only about 50 miles from me and for awhile my bids where doing fine, then the last day, it went threw the roof, leaving me far out of the game..

So it looks like I'm stuck with AM when I get it set up in my car with the 104in steel whip.

I "believe" the store in Bentleyville PA is as well - Just off I-70. I was there a couple weeks ago and some of the radios I seen in the display "appeared" to be some of the brands known to be not so legal. But that was a couple weeks ago, they may have pulled them by now. But there is a Truck Stop not far from there - a hole in the wall set up, with a CB shop that sells those sorts of sets also. It's in Madison, PA also off I-70. I know people who've bought or were informed when asked about - linears being on stock. They make little attempt to hide that fact. Or the fact of beefing up radios. I think if memory serves me correct, they display the illegal radios right out in the open.

Large corporations pay fines opposed to having their folks go to jail.
The obvious exceptions were the Michael Milkens.

That's not how it works with franchises. Franchises are required to carry certain items. The mother corporation usually absorbs any such fines. The ceiling is built-in to these companies as a cost of doing business. A paltry 125k, such as the figure you mention, is nothing at all to the corporation. When their ceiling is reached, only then can the method be effective. Nothing has changed since the seventies regarding enforcement,,,,not a damn thing. The amount of convictions (per the FCC) is actually less than the seventies and the only fines that have been increased (in frequency) are the ones against commerical broadcasters.

> The real fine is having to go to court to fight

>the FCC, and that sounds like what may

Not by these large corporations. They pay the fine and forget about it instantaneously.

>When it does it could cost them much more >than the $125K fine depending on how far >they want to take the fight up the legal ladder.

>This would be the case to watch.

The fines are paid and its business as usual.
These companies usually don't fight these fines. In fact, there is no large corporation has lodged such a court room battle (which you speak of concerning radio gear, amps, etc) for the exact reason you mention...it is much easier tand cheaper to pay the fine and continue,,,,,business-as-usual.
The ONLY way to change this is via legislation, and we all know the angry hammie who is pre-occupied with such nonsense is merely reactive, not proactive.
Again, if ANYTHING changed since the seventies regarding enforcement, it is that now is the best time as any to buy a radio and begin freebanding. Enforcement is practically non-existent unless you draw major attention to yourself with splatter and bleed.
Business as usual, and with the cooler weather comes the skip,,,,,27.555 is kicking up major contacts again and no one on the freq is remotely concerned with a single hammie's angry, jealous, errant, and reactive behavior.
Happy holidays.

But you MUST consider the probability factor. What you propose is deviation from the norm concerning the FCC. You have a better chance of hitting the lotto. Not going to happen. You are discounting the monetary factor, here. I believe you are missing the monetary picture here of why the huge companies stay in business year after year when only the littles ones are closed and put out of business.

Cite a single case involving the FCC tossing a white collar exec in jail for a similar charge.

Your position is based upon suppositions, the "if" factor, and the assumption the FCC is changing the manner in whcih they operate, as opposed to reality,,..business-as-usual within the FCC and minimal enforcement. In fact, Riley has written the FCC considers many of these complainants a pain-in-the-ass..he didn't come out and say those exact words, but DID say these type hammies (Oxendine) are often worse than the offenders themselves. An incredible statement from the head enforcement officer at the FCC.

I have in my collection of old radios one of the Roadtalker SSB rigs, as well as the identical JC Penny radio, as well as a Realistic Navaho SSB rig, two Johnson Viking Messengers, and 2 Browning Golden Eagle Mark IV's sill in original packaging and never been opened. All radios are fully functional and to my knowledge have ever been modified.

Maybe someday I might consider selling them but for now I keep them in a closet upstairs in my radio room. I also have a President Washington that has been modified to do 10M with a transverter for 6M inline.

I saw a strange antenna at the end of my street today, this gentleman had a moonraker up, but took it down and replaced it with something I have never seen before it is a beam antenna with vertical elements as well as elements at 45 degree angles from the 0-180 plane so one vertical up and two at angles down four sets of elements in each plane.

Any idea what the idea behind this is? It looks to be a home brew antenna.

yep that must be it thanks...never seen one before. His still looks to be

I don't have any at my finger tips, but that doesn't mean that there aren't any. And if by chance there are non there is always a first time. As they say with investing "past performance is no indication of future returns", in other words they, the FCC, could do so at their discretion.

I remember comments being offered up a year or two ago along the line that the FCC wasn't going to do anything about 10m intruders. Looks like they are doing something now. Assuming that the FCC won't get more aggressive in the future is not being smart. All it takes is a change in the leadership of the FCC. Imagine if a new FCC chairmen is appointed, and is a Ham with an ax to grind about the present situation?

Well what exactly did he say? I'm sure others would like to read the comments for themselves and make their own determination. I know I would. I have been to some Hamfests where he was a guest speaker, and I don't get the impression that you got.

And just what "type" is that? I'm not an apologist for Jerry but I see his point. If he has to be a thorn in the FCC's Butt, so be it. I have yet to see any government agency that didn't perform better if wasn't for some citizen getting on their case about doing the job they are being paid to do.

But not all items. How many time have you heard, but never really paid attention to, the statement at the end of commercials etc. that states "At participating stores"? Just because it is a franchise doesn't automatically mean they carry everything a company own store does. In fact I've been in many Pilot Travel centers and I specifically check the two-way radio section out just for fun. Funny how some of them you don't see even one of those import radios the FCC has fined Pilot over.

After they remove the offending product. Look how skittish the TV stations are after the Janet Jackson "wardrobe malfunction". It was only a $550K fine to the network. I'm sure it didn't dent their bank account very much. It wasn't much bigger than the fine that Pilot got. The networks are running scared about what they show on the air to the point where some local stations wouldn't air the uncut movie "Saving Private Ryan" for veterans day because they were afraid they would get slapped with another fine.

As silly as it is it just so happens that its the "angry hammie", a.k.a. the ARRL, that is going to save the CBer's behind. What I'm talking about is the direction the FCC is going in regards to the BPL issue. Whether you like it or not BPL is going to affect everybody using HF, irregardless if they so happen to be a Ham or CBer.

It would be much more productive if the bandwidth on this news group wasn't wasted debating the same old issues, but instead joining together in a united front to fight the FCC, and the deep pocket corporations, wanting to pollute the airwaves with RF trash from the digital signals on the power lines using BPL.The CBers really need some kind of national origination to represent their interests. Right now they're getting a free ride, so to speak, courtesy of the ARRL. Anything that benefits the Ham community in regards to stopping BPL also benefits CBers as well since your band, 11m, is right there next to the 10m Ham band. Both bands would be heavily affect by BPL noise. Just something for you to think about while you're ready to pound away at your keyboard in response.

Again, if ANYTHING changed since the seventies regarding enforcement, it is that now is the best time as any to buy a radio and begin freebanding. Enforcement is practically non-existent unless you draw major attention to yourself with splatter and bleed.
Business as usual, and with the cooler weather comes the skip,,,,,27.555 is kicking up major contacts again and no one on the freq is remotely concerned with a single hammie's angry, jealous, errant, and reactive behavior.
Happy holidays.

hey now, thats the 8 element jogunn. i use the 5 element with superior

Sounds like a Gizmotchy.

I'd rather have the moonraker if you're talking 4 elements against 4

Enforcement is but a shadow of what it once was. Back in the early '60s the FCC would yank your CB license and/or slap you with a fine just for violating the time-out rule, and they popped hoardes of CBers for that and many other minor violations.

Looking at the enforcement efforts of the FCC for the past several years there are two trends that become apparent: the number of FCC enforcement actions have been steadily declining, and the fines have been steadily increasing. You might also notice that lately the FCC rarely fines any person or company an amount that's beyond their means to pay. It should be glaringly obvious that the primary focus of the FCC is on the money, not on the enforcement. I wouldn't be suprised if the FCC performs financial background checks before issuing NALs. The FCC could do far more to enforce the regulations than their occasional shakedown tour in the vice district.

Think about it: a federal agency with the power to execute searches without a warrant, impose penalties without due process, and make up their own rules as they go; yet the violations continue unabated. And the only benefits from their actions are seen by the Treasury Dept.

They won't. If they did there would be constitutional challenges to their rules and the FCC would probably lose -- at the very least it would be a costly trial. That's also why the fines are never enough to incite any legal challenge in the courts, or to people and companies that do not have the financial resources to mount such a challenge.

The chairman has very little power to change the workings of the FCC.
It is the commission as a whole that has the power in that agency, and therefore it is controlled by whomever controls the commissioners.
Since there is so much corporate interest in the other aspects of the FCC, the ARS and CB will always be generally ignored -regardless- of who sits in the big chair.

Jerry has chosen a course of action. I may not agree that it's the -best- course of action, but then I'm not a ham and don't see things from his perspective. I -am- a CBer, and IMO you can stick a much bigger thorn in the FCC's ass if you pester your congressional rep. It still won't get anything accomplished, but at least you're forcing the FCC to answer to someone with some authority.

That I have heard mentioned before with the addtional comment being that this is the case due to lack of funds. That could explaine why the fines have been going up I suppose.

If you read the enforcement logs you'll see where they say you have to supply them with a copy of your tax return if you claim you can't pay the fine.

Big deal. If you read the terms of the license grant from the FCC the licensee agrees to station inspections, i.e. without a warrant, so the licensee doesn't have a bone to pick. They knew the rules of the game before hand.

> impose penalties without due process,

Oh, there is due process. If you don't like the fine then you can go to court. Not much different when you get popped for speeding. Don't like the ticket then talk to the judge.

> and make up

The rules are clearly spelled out in CFR 47.

> yet the violations continue unabated. And

The problems don't seem to be limited to just the FCC regulations. For example look at your speedometer the next time you're out driving, the posted speed limits, and the other drivers on the road. Seems like more cops on the road doesn't deter many from doing 80+ MPH on the expressways.

I doubt it. When they have the violator on audio tape with signal strenght readings, frequency counter readings, spectrum analyzer screen shots etc, when they go to court they're cooked. Besides, were in the constitution does it say that a citizen has the right to use a radio transmitter, much less in any maner they choose? If it isn't there then there is no constitutional right to challenge.

> -- at the very least it > would be a costly trial.

For the violator it sure is. Unless you're a big corporation a private person doesn't stand much of a chance when the FCC has the wealth of the Federal Treasury behind it to spend on legal proceddings. I can asure you their legal budget is bigger that your's or mine.

> That's also why the fines are never enough to > incite any legal challenge in the courts,

It's not always about the money. I have read where some have gone to court just over the principle of the mater. The money wasn't the main consideration for them.

> or to people and companies
> that do not have the financial resources to mount such a challenge.

And that's a shame too. It's not just the FCC that does this. How many people have gotten screwed over because they don't have the money to stand up for their rights in court? Too many.

There are only around 750K licensed Hams in the USA. I would suppose only a fraction of them are making complaints to the FCC. The FCC could as well just ignore the complaints all together. The fact that they're not doing so would suggest the enforcement action isn't simply to placate those complaining, but a genuine effort at enforcement action as limited as it is currently.

The chairmen sets the tone for the whole agency. The commissioners take their cue from him.

Yeah, the chairmen, like I said.

It's well documented that the current chairmen has an agenda that seems to be mainly fueled by corporate money being offered for valuable spectrum and that dang BPL crap.

Why do you think some of what is happening is happening? Maybe not enough to suit some people, but some progress is being made.

Yes, you and your sock puppies are not happy. Create a few more, and just maybe something will go your way. Hello Legeo.

He laid her on the table,
So white, clean and bare.

His forehead wet with beads of sweat,
He rubbed her here and there.

He touched her neck and then her breast,
And then, drooling, felt her thigh.

The slit was wet and all was set, He gave a joyous cry.
The hole was wide...he looked inside,

All was dark and murky.
He rubbed his hands stretched out his arms,

And then he stuffed the turkey.

Have A Happy Turkey Day!

Hello Starlord:

I know that corner really well. Once in a while I will go thru the Frosty Freeze for lunch and a drink. Get Gas accross the street, and haul on out of there.

If you keep going east you will run into Mohawk Man, and Lady Wrestler who live in one of those traier parks. Haven't heard them on in a long time tho ?!?!?!?!

Why would you want to be looking at the sky when you find a desert lot somewhere having a fire and a few friends over??!?!?!?

We use to have Star Gazing parties at one time. I never really got into looking at all this stuff but find it interesting.

Are you on channel 12 AM, or SSB lower 38, or 2 meters? Lots of guys now going to 220 simplex, but I don't have a 220 radio in the car now.
